As early as the first century, Musselburgh was a seat of population, When the Romans invaded Britain they established themselves in this locality, planting a colonia upon the rising ground at Inveresk. Where the church now stands an altar was erected to Appollo, the sun god, and their praetorium was in the adjacent grounds of Inveresk House. Towards the close of the last century an interesting discovery was made of the remains of a Roman villa, which afforded conclusive evidence that its occupant, the commander of this station, must have been an officer of high rank, affluent and noble, showing the importance of the post he held in the Imperial estimation. Doubtless he was one who sent his reports direct to, and received his orders direct from, the Eternal City. During the Roman occupation roads were made, bridges built, harbours constructed, order established, and around the protection this colony afforded it is needless to say, peace-loving people gladly settled. Not till the seventh century, however, do we find authentic history from which to glean information. At that period Musselburgh obtains notice in the Saxon chronicles as Eskmuthe of the Northumbrians, whose territory extended from the Humber to the Forth. It is worthy of remark that this name, given twelve centuries ago, has its exact equivalent in Inveresk, i. e., mouth of Esk, the present name of the parish. In earliest Scottish records mention is made of the two manors of Little Inveresk and Great Inveresk. Malcolm Conmore and his consort, Queen Margaret, whose chapel in Edinburgh Castle has been restored by command of Queen Victoria, and is the oldest building of which the Scottish metropolis can boast, gifted the manor of Little Inveresk to the monks of Dumfermline. Their son, David I., confirmed this, and gave in addition Greater Inveresk, which included the burgh and port of Musselburgh. From the baronial jurisdiction and extended powers then conferred upon the abbots of Dumfermline the burghal rights and privileges had beginning, and the community thus enjoying the then all-powerful protection of the Church obtained a considerable degree of commercial prosperity. The importance the place had acquired before the end of the twelfth century is evident from the Scottish nobles having assembled here in 1201 to take the oath of fidelity to Alexander II., infant son of William the Lion. Until the Reformation it continued a burgh of regality, belonging to Dumfermline Abbey; Lord Chancellor Maitland, of Thirlstane, then became the Superior, and it still pays a small annual sum in name of few duty to the Duke of Buccleuch, whose ancestress, Anne, Duchess of Monmouth, acquired right thereto about the beginning of last century. The latest attempt to extort feudal homage from the magistrates, as representing the townspeople, was in 1702, at the instance of Sir Robert Dickson, of Smerton, and was successfully resisted upon the ground that the charters granted to the burgh freed them of any such acknowledgments. In 1330 the Earl of Murray, the Regent during the minority of Robert the Bruce's son, appointed Roger of Fawside, whose castle, now in ruins, stands on the border of the parish, Ambassador to the English Court. Two years later the Regent was taken ill at Musselburgh, and lodged in the best house which the town afforded. Situated at the east end of the south side of High street behind the present Episcopal chapel, it was then unenclosed; and during his illness the burgesses maintained a regular guard upon the house to testify their respect for so illustrious a guest. This illness terminated fatally, but so deep an impression did the courtesy of the burgesses make upon the Earl of Mar, Randolph's cousin and successor in the Regency, that in 1340 he granted the town its first charter, applied to it the term "honest town"—a designation which it still retains, and has as its motto Honestas. After the disastrous battle of Pinkie, in 1547, this charter, with the whole of the burgh records, were ruthlessly destroyed by the Duke of Somerset; but in 1562 Robert Pitcairn, commendator of Dunfermline, executed another, affirming the ancient rights and privileges of the burgh. This charter is still extant, and has been ratified and confirmed by subsequent charters and Acts of Parliament, more particularly by one from John, Duke of Lauderdale, dated 1670, in which all former grants in favour of the burgh are acknowledged. In the year 1632 it was erected into a royal burgh by charter under the great seal, which excited the jealousy of the magistrates of Edinburgh, who contrived to obtain a reduction of the charter that year.

Musselburgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a treasurer, and seven councillors, elected according to the provisions of the Burgh Reform Act. The burgh unites with Leith, Newhaven and Portobello (usually called the Leith burghs) in returning one member to Parliament, the gentleman at present sitting being M. Ferguson, Esq. The magistrates are empowered to hold a court of record, and to grant enfeoffments. Their jurisdiction extends two and a half miles along the shore, from the Magdalen bridge rivulet on the west to Ravenshaugh streamlet on the east, which at that locality is the boundary with Haddingtonshire; but the magistrates possess no jurisdiction over Inveresk village, which is included within the county. The town consists of two streets in the direction nearly east and west; the main, or High street, extends from the bridge over the Esk on the west to the beautiful enclosures of Loretto and Pinkie on the east, and is on the great road from Edinburgh to Berwick and London. Parallel to the High street is the Mill bill, which leads from the Esk to the London road, at the entrance to the Links and Loretto grounds. A street known as Newbigging extends south from nearly the centre of the town opposite the cross, and leads directly to Inveresk, a quarter of a mile inland. The town contains a few minor streets and alleys. The only public edifice is the Town House, occupying an angle in the High street, a substantial and commodious edifice, including an Assembly room, council chamber, offices for the town clerk, town chamberlain, burgh surveyor, and constabulary quarters. Attached to the building is a clock tower with slated spire of quaint Flemish design. The clock was a gift to the town from the Dutch States in 1496, a century and a half before the pendulum was invented, and its working parts are still in such wonderful preservation that it may not improbably remain in serviceable condition for centuries to come. At that time a considerable import and export trade was carried on, and so cordial were the relationships thus formed that this enduring testimony to the friendship of the Dutch was sent here. In front of the municipal offices is the town cross, a square pedestal, within which is a disused draw well, surmounted by a stone pillar carrying a unicorn bearing a shield with the town's arms, three mussels and three anchors, arranged alternately. Connected with the Town House is the gaol, now used, since the passing of the Prison Act, as a temporary place of confinement for petty offenders. This prison is said to have been erected about 1590, from the materials of the ruinous chapel of Loretto. At the east end of Musselburgh, near the Links, are the scattered buildings and fields which appertain to the now well-known school of Loretto. The school house occupies the site of a monastery which was originally an offshoot from the castle of Our Lady of Loretto in Italy, and became a minor monastery of Dunfermline during the twelfth century. In the middle of the sixteenth century a pretended miracle, wrought by the monks, was exposed by Colville, a Kinross-shire laird. The populace, hating the monks, and being enraged at the deception, reduced the buildings to ruins and dispersed their inmates, for which the town used to be annually cursed by the Pope. After this the property fell into the hands of the Lauderdale family, whose monogram may still be seen over the door of an old vault, and it was afterwards bought by the celebrated Lord Clive, who erected a considerable part of the present building. In 1829 it was converted into a preparatory school by the late Rev. Dr. Langhorne, but gradually changed its type, and about thirteen years since it took rank as a public school, being especially noted for its proficiency in athletic games and choral singing. Its choir is probably the most powerful in Scotland, having, in fact, too much volume for the present temporary chapel.

The extensive common, known as Musselburgh Links, has long been in deserved repute as a golfing ground, and in its immediate proximity the Royal Musselburgh Golf Club, the Honourable Company of Edinburgh Golfers, the Edinburgh Burgess Golf Society and the Bruntsfield Golf Club have erected handsome and commodious club houses. Once a year the Royal Company of Archers resort hither to compete for the massive Musselburgh silver arrow—one of its most valued trophies. This competition was first instituted in the sixteenth century, and is considered to date back to a time when proficiency in the use of the bow was regarded of as great national importance as excellence in rifle shooting is now. This arrow has a vast number of gold and silver medals, which have been attached by its respective winners, and is annually returned to the town that it may again be offered for competition. When the friendly contest upon the Links has decided who is victor, the archers entertain the magistrates to dinner, and they in return present a riddle of claret, in accordance with an ancient custom. The Edinburgh race meeting is held here annually, and the races of the Royal Caledonian Hunt at intervals of three years.

Cromwell quartered his infantry on Musselburgh Links in 1650, before the battle of Dunbar, his own tent having been placed upon an elevated part nearly opposite Linkfield House. He took up residence in Inveresk House for a short time, and the apartment is still shown which was used as orderly room, and in which some court-martials are said to have been held. His cavalry were quartered at Inveresk, their horses stabled in the church, and his cannon planted upon the battery mound in the churchyard which had been cast up by Somerset in the reign of Edward VI. Skirting Musselburgh Links on the south are the fine villas of Linkfield, Woodside, Linkfield House and Victoria and Albert terraces; and at the eastern extremity the attractive suburb of Levenhall, including Buccleuch Park, Hope Place and West Pans—a seaside resort which is yearly becoming more and more popular

The streets of the town are of greater width than in most old country burghs, and are well paved with whinstone blocks. The drainage system has been efficiently carried out, and the water supply derived from the Moorfoots, is ample and excellent. The town is lighted with gas by a company established in 1831, whose works are at the north-west corner of the Links near the river mouth. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, are in operation here. There are several literary, benevolent and religious societies; golf, bowling, cycling, tennis, cricket and football clubs; there is also a battery of the Mid-Lothian Coast Artillery Volunteers and a company of the 6th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots, Lothian Regiment. Life in Musselburgh 60 years since has been delightfully described by Delta in the pages of "Mansie Waugh," while Mrs. Oliphant, in "Alieford," no less successfully deals with incidents at Wallyford; and it is well known that some of the characters intoduced by Sir Walter Scott in "The Antiquary" were picked up when he was quartered here with the Edinburgh Light Horse Volunteers. The Esk is crossed by six bridges: one of wood upon iron pillars and beams, at the lower ford; another of iron at the middle ford, for foot passengers only; the new stone bridge of five elliptical arches, designed by Rennie, the famous engineer, whose portrait is hung in the council chamber; the old stone bridge, up to the beginning of this century the chief artery of communication between Edinburgh, Berwick and London, now disused for vehicular traffic; the iron girder railway bridge on the North British Railway Musselburgh branch; the stone railway bridge carrying the N.B.R. main line to London; and the Cowpits wood bride for foot passengers near Dalkeith policies. The old bridge, a venerable structure of three arches, erroneously supposed to be of Roman origin, was built by Lady Jane Hepburn, wife of the then Lord Seton, an ancestress of the Earls of Winton, and grand-aunt of the notorious Earl of Bothwell, associated with the history of the unhappy Queen Mary. Upon the top of one of the buttresses may still be seen the iron fastenings to which the gateway for its defence was attached. The roadway is high and narrow and is now approached by a flight of steps at either end. Across it the Scottish army passed after the battle of Pinkie, when Lord Graham, eldest son of the Earl of Montrose, and others were killed on it by cannon shot from the English fleet anchored at the river mouth; and across it Queen Mary, Prince Charles Stewart and many more of noble and royal rank must have passed. Nor has the burgh been without royal visits during the present reign. Her Majesty the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Connaught have at different times honoured it with their presence, and the Princes have enjoyed playing golf upon its links. Adjoining the old stone bridge is the commodious terminal station of the Musselburgh branch of the North British Railway, with every suitable accommodation for the extensive, sometimes exceptionally heavy, traffic to be dealt with. The approach to High street from the station is through a fine avenue of trees called the Mall. Near the station and connected to it by a private railway, are the Patent Fishing Net Works of Messrs. Stuart, and the mills of the Inveresk Paper Company. Upon the death of Mr. James Paterson, the inventor of an ingeniously constructed loom capable of producing fishing nets equal to those made by hand, Messrs. Stuart acquired his factory and patent rights. With such energy and success did they conduct the concern that it was soon found necessary to erect the present large and handsome works. The buildings, detached for security in case of fire, occupy four sides of a parallelogram the shorter ends being occupied by the cotton mill and the warehouses. The whole are tastefully designed. The cotton mill has four colossal symbolic statues, executed in freestone, by Ritchie, an eminent local sculptor, and the office is so placed as to command an outlook upon all parts of the establishment. The centre area is pleasingly treated as an ornamental garden with fountain and shrubbery. Within the works the entire processes are carried on to convert raw hemp and cotton into twine and finished nets. The product is sent out ready for use at every important fishing station in the world, from Anstruther to the Antipodes; from the pilchard fisheries of Cornwall to the salmon reaches of the Columbia. All the patent machinery used in the manufacture is made by the firm, who keep a regular staff of foundrymen and mechanics for this purpose. Connected with the mills are villa residences for the managers and heads of departments, and commodious cottage dwellings for a number of the workpeople. In addition to these works the firm have another large factory at Buckhaven, Fife, similarly employed. Adjoining this establishment are the very extensive paper mills of the Inveresk Paper Company, which give employment to a large number of hands, and turn out enormous quantities of high-class writing, printing and enamelled papers. The chimney of these mills is 250 feet in height and carries off all offensive and chemical vapours arising in the manufacture. The public pathway alongside the works is maintained in admirable condition by the company, who have also with praiseworthy liberality considerably embellished the river bank by judicious tree planting. Besides these industries, two large breweries, malting barley, seed crushing, tanning and currying leather, the manufacture of confectionery, pottery-ware, salt, skin mats, brick and tile making and boat building are carried on.

The places of worship in Inveresk parish, including Musselburgh, Fisherrow, and New Craig Hall, &c., are detailed in a list appended to the Directory of the town. The parish church occupies the summit of the hill of Inveresk, and is a large square edifice without any architectural pretensions. It is a conspicuous object in all directions, and its lofty and elegant spire is a landmark in the navigation of the Firth of Forth. Here has been in all probability a place of worship since the first century, where the Roman legionaries worshipped the sun god, and indulged in Baccanalian revelry; the rites of heathenism gave place to the worship of the Most High. In the middle ages the church of St. Michael, of Norman-Gothic style, occupied this site, and from pre-Reformation times up to the present century was the parish church of Inveresk—the church of Williamson, of Coult, of Blackadder and Carlyle-Carlyle, the friend and companion of Home and Douglas, of Grange and Drummore—the scholar, the wit, the gentleman, Carlyle, the illustrious Jupiter, whose remains rest beneath the shadow of the present church which he laboured earnestly and well to have erected. In the churchyard are the remains of many naval and military heroes, and here also is the grave of David Macbeth Moir, the celebrated poet "Delta," to whose memory a handsome monument is erected at the top of High street. Musselburgh has long been distinguished for its schools—among which the most conspicuous is the Burgh Grammar School; there is an English burgh school in Musselburgh, and another in Fisherrow; these schools are now under the control of the School Board. In 1878, the ratable value of Musselburgh was £23,000, which had increased to £29,000 in 1888. The population of the burgh in 1881, was 7,866; but last year (1888), it was estimated at 11,000.

Fisherrow, consisting of four parallel streets, is connected with Musselburgh by the bridges previously noticed, and both are municipally, politically, and locally one town or burgh, under the sole jurisdiction of the provost, magistrates, and town council of Musselburgh. The small harbour is at the west end of Fisherrow, and is under the control of commissioners. A large sum has been expended in erecting and improving the piers, but the harbour is tidal, the access shallow, and can never admit vessels of any considerable tonnage. The custom house, connected with that of Leith, is near the harbour. A portion of the inhabitants of Fisherrow are fishermen, and the produce of their industry is conveyed by rail to Edinburgh and disposed of by their wives and daughters. As a class these fisher folks are hardy, industrious, frugal and well behaved. North Esk Lodge and Newfield (connected with the Loretto school), the villas of Eskbank, Rangitikei, Spring Cottage, Spring Gardens, Springbank, Mollends House, Campie House, Olive Bank, Stoneybank, and Stoneyhill are in this part of the town. Contiguous to Fisherrow Links are the public slaughter houses, constructed upon the most approved plan and with every modern appliance carefully introduced. The village of Inveresk is so pleasant that it has often been designated the Montpelier of Scotland. It consists chiefly of elegant and substantial mansions and villas, with beautiful grounds surrounding them.

Deantown and Cowpits are colliery villages further south. Pinkie House is delightfully situated in extensive policies, with fine old trees, and is admittedly one of the best specimens of an old Scottish manor house in the county. Long the country residence of the Abbots of Dunfermline, it has many historical associations connected with it; and its turretted tower and much admired Gothic fountain are perhaps the portions of greatest antiquity and interest. The battlefield of Pinkie is situated about a mile south of Pinkie House, and overlooking it a mile and a half further off is Carberry hill, celebrated for the surrender of Queen Mary to the confederated nobility in 1567, and where she finally parted with Bothwell. Near, is the fine mansion of Carberry Tower. Numerous villas adorn the vicinity of Musselburgh. New Hailes, a fine mansion, half a mile south-west from Fisherrow, was the seat of Sir David Dalrymple, Bart., Lord Hailes, distinguished as the great restorer of Scottish history and antiquities. He died in this mansion, in which his valuable library is carefully preserved. This house is now occupied by, and is the property of Sir Charles Dalrymple, Bart., M.P. In this parish are found limestone, freestone, and coal, the latter particularly in abundance. From the higher grounds to the south most extensive views are to be obtained, reaching from Ben Lomond, Ben Ledi and Ben Voirlich, or the west to the German Ocean, and from the Grampians, Ochils, and Lomonds to the Pentlands, Moorfoots, the Lammermuirs, the Firth of Forth, and Fife coast, forming the foreground of the panorama. The entire parish of Inveresk embraces an area of 5,155 acres, and in 1891 had a population of 10,537.

Monkton-Hall, a small village in the parish of Inveresk, is of some little note in the annals of Scottish warfare, as on the eve of the battle of Pinkie the army lay around this village; and here a sort of Parliament was held by Governor Arran, at which an act was passed providing that the nearest heir of any churchman who should fall in the ensuing battle should have the gift of his benefice.

New Craig Hall, or Niddrie, is a mining village, situated about a mile west from Fisherrow. The colliery works of the Niddrie and Benhar Coal Company are a short distance further.

Brunstane, or Brunstane Mills, is a hamlet situated on the road from Musselburgh to Edinburgh, distant from the latter about four miles. Brunstane Castle, or House, which stands on high ground to the west, was formerly the patrimonial residence of the family of Creichton, who took an active share in the Reformation. In Brunstane and Ormiston Castles, John Knox and other Reformers always found a welcome and a shelter. At a later period of Scottish history, Brunstane was occupied by a very different person—namely, John, Duke of Lauderdale, to whose memory a tablet may be seen in the west vestibule of Inveresk church; it is now tenanted by a private family.

PATH-HEAD,

CRANSTON, EDGE-HEAD AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PATH-HEAD, or Path-head Ford, is a considerable village in the parish of Crichton, 11 miles S.S.E. from Edinburgh, 5 S. from Dalkeith, and 3 N.W. from Fala, situated on both sides of the Lauder, the great south county and London road passing through it. The village is about two miles from that of Crichton (described along with Heriot, which see). The principal street is broad and straight, and the houses, which are mostly of one storey, are well built. The surrounding country abounds with beautiful scenery, and several seats of the gentry contribute in ornamenting the district. Population of the village in 1881, 583.

The parish of CRANSTON, or Cranstoun, is intersected by the river Tyne, having Dalkeith and Newbattle on the north and west, and Crichton on the south, extending 5 miles in lenght by 3 in breadth, but very narrow in the middle. The land is high and undulating, but is well cultivated and enclosed, and embellished with numerous and delightful plantations. A handsome church, of white freestone, in the Gothic style of architecture, is situate here, on the road to Dalkeith. Within the parish is Oxenfoord Castle and Preston Hall—the former the seat of the Earl of Stair. The parish comprises the colliery village of EDGE-HEAD, and COUSLAND and PRESTON, two other villages, but they contain nothing worthy of note. Acreage 5,100. In 1881 Cranston had a population of 998.

PENICUIK,

GLENCORSE, AUCHINDINNY, GREENLAW, AND MILTON BRIDGE.

PENICUIK is a parish in the county of Mid-Lothian, and on the borders of Peebles-shire. The parish extends from eleven to twelve miles in length, and six in breadth, and is watered by the North Esk, which runs its whole extent. The name Penicuik is of Celtic etymology, and signifies "the hill of the Cuckoo." Along its northern border, the parish includes a considerable part of the Pentland Hills, on which are pastured numerous flocks of sheep. The southern portion is more level, and the soil is various, but for some years past dairy farming has been engaged in to a considerable extent on several of the farms. The principal industry is the manufacture of paper, which is carried on with great enterprise at Valleyfield Mills by Messrs. A. Cowan & Sons, and at Esk Mills by Messrs. J. Brown & Co. The mills of Valleyfield are the largest in this part of the country, and there both printing and writing papers are manufactured, thus furnishing employment for a large number of hands. In the beginning of this century these mills had been acquired by Government for the reception of 5,000 French prisoners of war. During the years the prisoners were located at Valleyfield, some 300 died and were buried in the grounds, and to their memory a handsome monument was, in 1860, erected near the spot by "certain inhabitants." The other mill in the parish, known as the Esk Mills, was the first cotton mill in Scotland, and was afterwards used as cotton and paper mills, but is now entirely devoted to the latter trade. Penicuik House is an elegant edifice, built about 1761, by Sir James Clerk, and is now the residence of Sir George Clerk, Bart. There is a good collection of paintings in it, and Ossian's Hall, the work of Runciman, is much admired. Sir James also collected a considerable number of Roman antiquities. To the south of the house is an obelisk erected to the memory of Allan Ramsay, the poet, who frequently resided here. In this parish there is also the fine old mansion of New Hall, in the grounds which is situated what is generally supposed to be the scene of Allan Ramsay's fine pastoral "The Gentle Shepherd;" and there "Habbies How" is pointed out. Another romantic glen in the adjoining parish of Glencorse has also been claimed as the original "Habbies How." There is abundance of coal and limestone, the latter occasionally so hard as to admit of a fine polish, and in which many petrifications are found. Whinstone and freestone are also plentiful, and in Carlope Hill have been discovered specimens of lead and iron ore. Ironstone mining has in recent years become an important industry, both in this parish and that of Glencorse. There are several chalybeate and petrifying springs in this quarter; and on the banks of the North Esk, near Spittal Hill, there is a well, the waters of which have a bitter taste, and are drunk by the country people for bowel complaints. The ruins of some old castles and the vestiges of encampments are pointed out in this district. While there are several small hamlets in the parish of Penicuik, the only populous place is the thriving town, which includes the police burgh of Penicuik and the contiguous villages of KIRKHILL, FIELDSEND, and SHOTTSTOWN. The town is well built, being seated on high land, overhanging the north bank of the North Esk river, on the road from Edinburgh to Peebles, about 9 miles S.W. from the former, 13 N. from the latter, and 9 S S.W. from Dalkeith. The parish of Penicuik encloses an area of 18,830 acres and in 1881 had a population of 5,309, and the burgh 3,793.

GLENCORSE, or Glencross, is a small parish in the county of Mid-Lothian, containing about three square miles, and at a distance of six miles S. from Edinburgh. The road to Dumfries, Biggar, Moffat, Peebles, and Penicuik passes through it. In the vale of Glencorse, on the north side of the Esk, are the ruins of a chapel, dedicated to Saint Catherine. The church is built on an eminence surrounded by trees. GREENLAW, or GLENCORSE, has been formed into the 1st Regimental district and depôt of the Royal Scots. MILTON BRIDGE is a small hamlet in this parish. Acreage of the parish, 4,257 Population in 1881, 1,500.

AUCHINDINNY is a village in the parish of Glencorse, 7½ miles S. from Edinburgh, on the road to Peebles, situated in a romantic dell, through which flows the North Esk. This place has been long known for the manufacture of paper, and it has been said that one of the first mills established in Scotland was erected in this locality, and there is one now in operation contiguous to the village. Paper making was introduced into North Britain about one hundred and seventy years ago; previously all stationery articles were imported regularly from Holland.

PORTOBELLO,

DUDDINGSTON, JOPPA, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PORTOBELLO, a parliamentary burgh and a fashionable watering place, is situated on a plain on the south side of the Frith of Forth, and in the parish of Duddingston, with a small part in the parish of South Leith. It is three miles from Edinburgh by the turnpike road. The North British railway to Berwick and Carlisle possesses a station near the centre of the town and another at Joppa, thus giving ready access to all parts of the kingdom. Few towns have risen more rapidly in importance. Little over a century ago the ground which it occupies was an unproductive waste along the shore, overspread with whins and bent, affording ready shelter to the smuggler and to lawless characters from the metropolis. There was then only one thatched hut of two apartments, "a but and a ben," which stood until the year 1862, when it was pulled down to make room for the Town Hall, which is built on the site. The fanciful idea is quite common and generally accepted, that this hut was built by a sailor who had served under Admiral Vernon at the storming of Puertobello, in the Isthmus of Panama, in the year 1739, and who had misanthropically secluded himself in what must then have been a dreary region. For a long time it was, with the exception of one or two shepherds' shealings, the only habitation in the locality, and was used as an humble hostelry or half-way house for travellers taking the shore road from Musselburgh to Edinburgh. From the fact that when the present high road, passing through Jock's Lodge, was formed, the fishwives from the former town, who were then in the habit of carrying their fish to market in the city in creels or baskets on their backs, refused to use the new road, but trudged on in their old path, it came to be known as the "Fishwives' Causeway." A fragment only of this "causeway," which some suppose to be Roman, but which is more likely to be one of the roads constructed from the city in Queen Mary's time, still exists; railway and other modern improvements having made sad havoc of such works of antiquity. Few if any houses were erected in the neighbourhood of the hut for at least a quarter of a century. In 1765 William Jamieson, sometimes called "the father of Portobello," discovered a valuable bed of clay, which long ages had laid down in the estuary of the Figget burn. His father (Patrick Jamieson) was a celebrated builder of his day in Edinburgh. The extension and improvement of the city, which had began about that time by the building of the North Bridge and the New Town, was largely undertaken by him, and building material for interior walls being much in demand, the son established a brick and tile works, a pottery, and afterwards a harbour at the mouth of the burn. It is worthy of note that the elder Jamieson was the builder of the Royal Exchange of Edinburgh in 1753, while the son restored the Tron church, the steeple of which being of wood, was afterwards destroyed by fire in 1824. He was also contractor for making the public drains of the city at an outlay of no less than £100,000, the rubbish from the excavations of which was chiefly carried to Portobello to fill up the holes made in course of the manufacture of bricks, tiles, &c. These works naturally led to the building of workmen's houses, and the village so formed came to be known as the village of Figget, and more frequently, perhaps, Brickfield, under which name we find it designated in Arnot's "History of Edinburgh."

During the latter part of the century, however, attracted no doubt by the beautiful level beach, and the bracing air of the locality, some of the citizens of Edinburgh began to erect summer residences amid the whins and green parks, eastward of the brickworks. Among the first of these to be built was Mr. Jamieson's house about 1782, which still stands in Adelphi place, though very much altered in appearance. Long afterwards it was converted into a school, and was for some time occupied as the burgh police and council chambers. The Tower, Shrubmount, afterwards the residence and the house in which Hugh Miller died; Ramsay Lodge, Park House, and other country residences were scattered over the ground; but until well on into the present century these detached houses must have been few and far between, for in "Scotland Delineated," a work written in 1799, we find "Porto-Bello" described as "a rising village of about 300 inhabitants, employed in the manufacture of brick, tiles, jars, brown pottery, and white stoneware," but no reference made to it as a watering place. In 1809 a chapel of ease, connected with and subordinate to the Kirk Session of Duddingston, was built, of which the Rev. John Glen continued to be the minister until the disruption of 1843.

Within the last eighty years the town has increased very much in size and importance. It consists of a main street, the High street, which forms a part of the highway from Edinburgh to London. Including Joppa, which is now practically a part of the town, the length of this street is a mile and a quarter. The streets branching off right and left, the terraces, squares, &c. of handsome houses and villas are all well built. The majority of these houses have gardens in front, which give the town a light and airy appearance. It was erected into a burgh in 1833, and is governed by a provost, two bailies, and six councillors. Conjointly with Leith and Musselburgh, it returns a member to Parliament, the present representative being R. C. Munro-Ferguson, Esq., who was returned Aug. 26th, 1886. There are a police, cleaning and lighting establishment, and a fire brigade. Water of excellent quality is supplied in abundance at high pressure, and the houses and streets are lighted with gas. The magistrates and council have expended a large sum of money on the drainage of the town, which is thorough and complete. They also constructed a broad marine promenade, a mile in length, along the sea beach, in the middle of which stands the Prince of Wales Fountain, a very handsome ornamental drinking fountain. There is also an elegant pier, 1,250 feet long, with seats capable of accommodating 2,000 persons, and a spacious saloon for the use of visitors. The beach is a noble expanse of pure smooth sand, affording at all times the greatest facility and safety to bathers, and there is also a commodious suite of warm salt water baths. The residential accommodation is of all kinds—several hotels, houses of various sizes and degrees of elegance, and large villas suitable for first-class families.

The places of worship are in connection with the Church of Scotland, the Free Church, United Presbyterian, Episcopal, Congregational, and Roman Catholic; commodious and handsome Board schools have been erected, and there are also several private academies. There are three banks—branches respectively of the Royal, the National, and the Clydesdale Banking Companies. A considerable trade is done in the manufacture of paper, bottles, pottery, earthenware, bricks, and tiles; and at JOPPA there are salt works. The scenery is varied and extensive—on one side the noble estuary of the Forth, with the island of Inchkeith, the hills of Fife and Kinross, the bay of Alderlady, the fertile lands of East Lothian, Traprainlaw, North Berwick Law, and in the distance the Bass Rock, while the coast is studded with numerous picturesque towns and villages; and on the other side are Arthur's Seat, Craigmillar Castle, and the Pentland Hills. The air is pure and invigorating, and the locality very healthy. These immediate local advantages, together with its proximity to the metropolis, to which there is constant communication by railway and tramway cars, and the easy access to all parts of the kingdom, combine to render Portobello a most desirable place either for permanent residence or temporary retirement. In 1881 Portobello (including Joppa) had a population of 6,926, but it cannot now (1888) be less than 8,000.

DUDDINGSTON parish is bounded by the parish of Canongate, a part of the metropolis on the west; South Leith on the north, the sea and part of Inveresk on the east, and Liberton on the south. The parish derives its name from the settlement here of one Dodin, during the reigns of David I. and Malcolm IV., at which time the Barony of Dodinestoun with the church was gifted to Kelso Abbey, founded by David I. in 1128. It remained in the possession of the Abbey till the Reformation, when it was secularised and came into the possession of a family of the name of Thomson the last of whom was made a baronet by Charles I. in 1636. There are frequent references in the Chartulery of Kelso to Dodincston and its founder; among the earliest being one in a charter granted in the reign of Malcolm IV., making a grant of the church of Swinton to the Abbey, in which "Dodine de Dodinestun" appears as a witness. Dodine also granted to the first Abbot, Herbert, the church of Lintun, Ruderick. In charters of later dates, the son of Dodin is a witness to several, particularly in one by William de Vetere Ponte to the Canons of Holyrood, where he signs himself Hugo, Filius Dodini de Dodinestun. Richard, the son of Hugo, and grandson of Dodine, at a subsequent period—between 1221 and 1240—renounced any claim he or his predecessors had upon the lands, they then passed into possession, "in feu ferm" of a family of the name of De Boset. The Barony of Duddingston became the property of the notorious Duke of Lauderdale in 1674, from whom it passed with a daughter of his second wife, as pin money, to her husband, the first Duke of Argyle. In 1745 it was sold by his successor to James, Earl of Abercorn, whose successor, the Duke of Abercorn, still holds a large portion of it. From a very early period it seems that there have been two villages called EASTER and WESTER DUDDINGSTON, both of which, though considerably reduced in population and house accommodation, are otherwise much improved in appearance. The mining and weaving populations which about a century ago occupied them, have entirely disappeared, in consequence of these two industries having ceased to exist in the parish. A better class of houses and villas has taken their place. Wester Duddingston is charmingly situated near the base of Arthur's Seat, and at the east end of the loch which bears its name. Round Arthur's seat is a noble drive, known as the Queen's Drive. The church, which is Norman, and of very great antiquity, occupies a small eminence rising from the verge of the water. Though modernised externally, its interior ornaments and arches appear to be as old as the days of Dodin, and from documentary and other evidence, it seems to be undoubted that it was built in the first part of the twelfth century. Duddingston Loch is a beautiful sheet of water, about the third of a mile in length, and not more than half a mile from the southern outskirts of Edinburgh. There is an excellent road between Duddingston and Portobello. The parish encloses an area of 1,731 acres, and contained in 1881 a population of 7,830.

JOPPA, before mentioned, intimately connected with, and now a part of the burgh of Portobello, is of modern growth. Its salt works and quarries have been wrought for many years, but the latter are now worked out. Coal at one time was found in great abundance, but in consequence of the flooding of the pits, which stood near the sea, in 1790, the works have been entirely abandoned. From its proximity to the beach and rocks, Joppa is a favourite resort of summer visitors. There are numbers of neat villas built near the road, nearly all of which are laid out for their accommodation.

RATHO,

KIRKLISTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RATHO is a small village situated about eight miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, nearly in the centre of its parish, and contiguous to the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway and the Union canal, by which communication it has ready access to the capital and intermediate district. The parish, which is about four miles long and three broad, and abounds in whinstone, comprises an area of 6,147 acres; it lies in the middle between the Pentland Hills and the Frith of Forth. The east part is flat and fertile, but the ground rises gradually towards the west. Dalmahoy, the principal residence of the Earl of Morton, and Hatton, formerly belonging to the family of Lauderdale, both beautiful and elegant seats, are in this parish: these with the plantations of Addison give a rich and pleasant aspect to the country. Agriculture is carried on with spirit and success. The parish church is an irregular building, having been originally erected in the 12th century. It was restored in the 17th and again in the earlier part of this century, and portions of all three erections being now in use, it is altogether an interesting structure. The public school is spacious and well attended. There is also an Episcopalian church on the Dalmahoy estate, and a Roman Catholic church has been erected in the parish. The population in 1881 was 1, 815; of this number the village had 713.

KIRKLISTON is partly in Mid-Lothian, and extends into Linlithgowshire; the village is eight miles w. from Edinburgh, situated on the left bank of the Almond, on the road to Falkirk. This place was anciently called Temple-Liston, from the circumstance of the Knights-Templars having formerly an establishment here. The village is well built, but of limited trade; distilling and grinding corn are the principal branches. The church is neat, and its situation remarkably pleasant. The surface of the country is agreeably varied by rising ground—is rich, well cultivated, and produces excellent crops. Here Lord Stair first introduced the culture of cabbage in the open fields. Within a field on the east side of the Almond stands a remarkable monument of antiquity, called the Catstane, erected at a period too remote for conjecture. It stands four feet and a half above the ground, and is about eleven feet and a half in circumference; its surface bears a dilapidated inscription, which has puzzled the skill of antiquarians to decipher. About a mile from Kirkliston is Newliston House, principally erected and finished by John Earl of Stair, and now the elegant seat of Thomas Alexander Hog, Esq. The house is handsome and modern, the plantations extensive and tastefully disposed. Area of the parish, 9,505 acres; population in 1881, 2,580.

STOW,

CAITHA AND FOUNTAINHALL.

STOW, an extensive parish in the southern extremity of the county, is nearly sixteen miles long and eight broad, and partly in Selkirkshire. At the village of Stow, which is 21 miles S.E. distant from Edinburgh, is a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North British Railway, and three churches, belonging respectively to the Establishment, the Free church, and the United Presbyterians. There are two woollen manufactories here. In the village is a very handsome town hall, part of which is devoted to a literary institute and library, and a public room for lectures. The village is well lighted with gas, supplied by a public company. Hirings for servants are held on Friday before the last Monday in February and the second Tuesday in March. The fast days are the second Wednesday of May and November. Acreage 36,843. Population in 1881, 2,395.

ELGINSHIRE,

SO designated from the name of its capital, ELGIN, and sometimes MORAYSHIRE, from being the central division of the "Province of Moray," is one of the northern counties of Scotland; bounded on the north by that branch of the North Sea called the Moray Frith, on the east and south-east by Banffshire; on the south-west by Inverness-shire, and on the west by the latter county and also that of Nairn. The figure of Elginshire is very irregular, being intersected in several places by districts of the counties which form its boundaries; with Nairn it is so intimately connected, that, in speaking of its shape, that small county is not unfrequently included in the description. Thus conjoined, the district is somewhat of a triangular figure—with the apex pointed inland—and in this quarter partaking of the wild, rocky and mountainous character of the Highlands. The county may be said to comprise 473 square miles of land, and extends from north to south forty miles, and from east to west twenty miles. Both in point of size and in population, Elgin ranks as the eighteenth amongst Scottish counties. For many years past agricultural improvements have been made with rapid strides, and the greater portion of the waste land is now either brought into cultivation or planted with forest trees. In ancient times the limits of the county were much more extensive than at present, comprehending all that tract of country which lies between the river Spey on the east, the Beauly on the north-west, and the northern confines of Argyleshire on the south-west. The remains of antiquity are numerous, of which the cathedral of Elgin, the Bishop's palace at Spynie, the priory of Pluscardine, the estates of Lochindorb and Dunphail, and the "dun" of Relugas, are the chief. Of the struggles of the natives with the Danes, who infested the district in former ages, there are various testimonials, such as "cairns," monumental pillars, &c., &c. The "Province of Moray," anciently so important and extensive, in the present day is without any political distinction, and is divided into three several shires of Banff, Moray (or Elgin), and Nairn. On the east it is separated from Aberdeenshire by the Deveron; on the west it is bounded by Inverness-shire, and on the north it has the large arm of the sea, designated from it the Moray Frith. So late as the time of Charles I., the Highlanders considered Moray as a sort of neutral land, where every man was at liberty to take his prey. The province of Moray suffered more, perhaps, than any other district in Scotland by the civil wars. The people were then generally attached to the covenant, and, as Montrose made it one of his principal scenes of action, it is easy to conceive that its peaceable farmers were not permitted to have both their opinions and their goods undisturbed. Montrose, in his descent upon Moray, in 1645, after his victory of Innerlochy, destroyed all the houses of such as did not join his standard, and gave up the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Elgin to indiscriminate pillage.

SOIL, SURFACE, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The soil of this county, though less uniform than that of Banffshire, is for the most part a sandy loam—in some places a sandy gravel; considerable tracts are of very fertile clay, and of the most genial mould. The low country may be pictured as a large plain, extending from the Spey westward, between the shore and a range of mountains, for the whole length of the district, nearly forty miles—but of unequal breadth, from about five to twelve miles or more, measured in a straight line from the hills to the shore; this plain, however, is diversified over its whole extent by ridges of lower hills in general nearly parallel to the shore; beyond this are valleys of great fertility and beauty, near the sources of the rivers Spey, Lossie and Findhorn, with the lesser vales along the banks of the tributary streams which pervade the intervening hills. Within the range of the mountain district the country may be described as chiefly pastoral; the arable land, in most instances, hanging upon the acclivities of the valleys, or stretching out in narrow plains upon the banks of the waters which wind among the hills—the wideness of the valley bearing a relative proportion to the size of the river. The upper part of the county is popularly termed "the Brae of Moray;" and is mountainous and woody, and abounds in beautiful lakes. Agriculture is pursued in a spirited manner, and the land in general yields a higher rent than that of the neighbouring shires. In the lower part of the county, the Earl of Fife and other proprietors formed plantations to so great an extent that almost every part of the land inaccessible to the plough has been covered with different species of forest trees. Except sandstone, limestone, and marl, no mineral substance of value has been discovered in this district. The south of this county produces principally oats, but in the north is unsurpassed for the quantity and quality of the crops of turnips, potatoes, barley, and wheat. To the breeding and rearing of cattle much attention is devoted, the polled Aberdeenshire and the pure short-horned being the breeds most highly prized. Little can be said respecting manufactures; woollen stuffs are made to a small amount, which, together with grain, cattle, salmon, hewn freestone, wood and whiskey, comprehend the principal exports, the chief imports being coal, iron, timber, and manures. There are also ship and boat building yards, breweries, tanneries, &c. Herring fishing is prosecuted at several villages on the coast, and fine salmon fishing at the mouths of the Spey and Findhorn, and all along the sea coasts. The coast of this district, although within the fifty-eighth degree of north latitude, has ever been distinguished for the mildness of its climate; the hardier kind of fruit, all the varieties of the apple, and almost all of the pear and of the plum, by a little attention may be abundantly produced on every farm; whilst flowers and fruit of the more rare species are brought to perfection in the gardens and orchards of this county. With respect to the winds, the most prevalent gales are from the north-west. This part of the country presents no object so elevated as to attract the clouds or impede their course; and from this cause, it is concluded, falls of snow are comparatively unfrequent and of small depth, as they are drifted over the subjacent levels insomuch that the operations of husbandry are but little interrupted by the inclemency of the weather. It is asserted that in the lower parts of the Moray the climate is as warm, and the atmosphere at least as dry, as in any district in Scotland; in the higher quarter the weather is more mild than in the adjoining county of Banff, at the same distance from the sea coast—a natural consequence of its local position, the progress of cultivation, and the inherent warmth of the soil.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers are the Spey, the Findhorn, and the Lossie, all flowing in a northerly direction, and each teeming with the finest salmon. There are many delightful lakes, of which Loch Spynie is most deserving of notice; it is three miles in length and one in breadth, and appears to have been formerly a firth of the sea, though it is now shut up at the east and west by a long extent of valuable ground. In accordance with this apparency, the land between the lake and the sea still retains the appellation of Ross Isle; and a corroborative proof of the accuracy of the popular designation is exhibited by the sea-shells (particularly those of the oyster) that are found on the margin of the lake, several feet below the surface of the earth. Loch Spynie nourishes several of the aquatic tribes, but none in such abundance as the perch and the pike. The RAILWAYS in this county are the Great North of Scotland and the Highland lines, which have stations at Elgin and other towns.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Elginshire comprehends sixteen parishes and six parts of parishes; it contains two royal burghs—ELGIN and FORRES; the former unites with Cullen, Banff, Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead in returning one member to Parliament; and the county at large, in conjunction with Nairnshire, deputes another member. The present representative is Charles Henry Anderson, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1887-88 was 5,252. The lord-lieutenant is the Right Hon. the Earl of Fife, K.T. By the census returns for 1871, the county contained a population of 20,061 males, and 23,067 females; total, 43,128; in 1881, the figures were: males, 20,725; females, 23,063; total, 43,788, showing an increase during the ten years of 660. The valuation of the county for 1887-88 was, exclusive of railways, £159,217, and of railways, £22,381; total, £181,598.

BURGHEAD,

DUFFUS, HOPEMAN, CUMMINGSTON, NEW DUFFUS, ROSEISLE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BURGHEAD is a fishing village, situated on a bold head and jutting out into the Moray Frith, in the parish of Duffus, 9 miles W. from Elgin, and about 10 N.E. from Forres. It possesses a fine pier, and a safe and commodious harbour, well protected from the north and east winds; at high water steam or other vessels may enter with perfect safety. This was anciently a Roman as well as a Danish station; the remains of a fort of the latter nation are still visible, also a well dug out of the solid rock, which is known by the name of the Roman well. The occupation of the inhabitants is fishing for salmon, herring, and cod. There is also a chemical works, at which there are a number of people employed. The vessels belonging to this place land goods here for the surrounding country. In the parish is an Established church, together with a chapel of ease at Burghead, where there are also a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a public school. Population in 1881, 1,428.

DUFFUS parish extends along the shore of the Moray Frith to the north of Elgin, from which the Church is about 5 miles distant. The parish is about 6 miles in length, by about 3 in breadth and contains 9,475 acres. The villages of ROSEISLE, HOPEMAN, CUMMINGSTON, and NEW DUFFUS are all within the parish, the population of which in 1881 was 3,985.

CUMMINGSTON is a small village, situated on the road midway betweenn Burghead and Hopeman, and almost without any trade.

HOPEMAN is a village situated 2 miles E. of Burghead, on the coast of the Moray Frith. It possesses a neat harbour, which at the present time (1888) is being extended, but the shipping of the port is not extensive. There is a Free church here.

NEW DUFFUS is a small village near the parish church of Duffus, prettily situated, and entirely agricultural.

ROSEISLE is a hamlet near Burghead bay, 5 miles N.W. of Elgin.

DUTHIL,

ROTHIEMURCHUS AND CARR BRIDGE.

DUTHIL is a parish lying partly in this county and partly in that of Inverness; the river Spey is the divisional line here between the two districts, and the river Dulnan intersects that part of the parish situated in Moray, for nearly thirteen miles, when it falls into the Spey. ROTHIEMURCHUS, once a part of this parish, and still connected with it in civil matters, is now a parliamentary parish lying between the Cairngorm mountain and the Spey, a short way further up the river than the greater part of Duthil; jointly they extend in length twenty miles by a breadth of seventeen. The whole is generally highland in its character, game is plentiful, and there is a considerable quantity of natural wood. The name of Grant is remarkably prevalent in this district. The parish church stands about 7 miles S.W. from Grantown and 24 S.W. from Inveravon, and there is a Free church and manse. CARR BRIDGE, or as it is commonly called the "Bridge of Carr," is a small village in this parish, 20 miles N.N.E. from Kingussie, and 25 S.E. from Inverness. The parish of Duthil has an area of 71,927 acres, and contained in 1881, 1,664 inhabitants.

EDENKILLIE AND DALLAS.

EDENKILLIE is a parish lying to the south of Forres. The church, which is near the centre of the parish, is about 9 miles S. from Forres, in a most romantic situation. It stands on the banks of the Divie, a black tumbling stream that dashes from rock to rock along the bottom of deep narrow ravines, and a little further down falls into the Findhorn. The woods of Darnaway on the west, and Altyre and Logie on the east, are very extensive and unsurpassed in beauty. The viaduct, which carries the Inverness and Perth Junction railway over the Divie, near the church of Edenkillie, is said to be the finest bridge in the north of Scotland. It has seven arches, and the height from the surface of the water to the rails is about 110 feet. Acreage, 32,466. Population in 1881, 1,175.

DALLAS is a parish 15 miles in length and 9 in breadth. The village is about 11 miles S.W. of Elgin, and 9 S.E. of Forres, which latter is the nearest railway station. Acreage of the parish, 22,903. Population in 1881, 915.

ELGIN,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF LOSSIEMOUTH, ALVES NEW SPYNIE, BIRNIE, BISHOP MILL, LHANBRYD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ELGIN is a royal burgh, the capital of its shire, and the seat of a presbytery in the synod of Moray; 189 miles N. of Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen, and 153 by way of Brechin and Huntly, 33 N. of Brechin, 64 W. of Aberdeen, 39 N E. of Inverness, 12 E. by N. of Forres, and 9 W. of Fochabers; pleasantly situated on the right bank of the river Lossie, about 5 miles above its influx into the Moray Firth, at Lossiemouth, and surrounded by hills o'erclad with waving pine, beech, oak, and elm trees. It is the general supposition that the town was originally a settlement of Helgy, a general of the army of Sigurd, the Norwegian Earl of Orkney, who, about the year 927, conquered Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, and Moray, and it is said that from this person the name of Elgin is derived; and as the word Helgyn is still used in the inscription upon the seal of the town, it is probable that this etymology is correct. So early as the reign of William the Lion, a castle was built here, the ruins of which are still visible on an eminence called Lady Hill, on the north-west side of the town. It is new the site of a monumental column erected by public subscription, in memory of the last Duke of Gordon. In 1224, Andrew, Bishop of Moray, translated the bishopric from Spynie to the Church of the Holy Trinity, near Elgin; but the cathedral was burned down by Alexander Stewart, Lord of Badenoch (commonly called the Red Wolf of Badenoch), son of Robert II., in 1390, who was forced from his fastness, in Lockerbie, to do penance for the deed. About the year 1414 it was rebuilt in a magnificent manner. From what still remains, it appears to have been a large and superb edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, two hundred and sixty-four feet in length, and thirty-five in breadth. The chapter-house, which still remains pretty entire, and was some years since repaired and covered with a roof of lead by the Exchequer, is a specimen of tasteful architecture; and the whole, when perfect, is supposed to have been one of the most magnificent religious structures in Europe. The ruins, which are carefully preserved by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, form a conspicuous object on the approach to Elgin from the east; while, as a beautiful contrast, immediately opposite, towards the south, stands Anderson's Institution for the support of old age and the education of youth, a fine modern structure, erected by the munificent bequest of Major-General Andrew Anderson, H.E.I.C.S., a native of this place, and of very poor parentage. The funds for the support of this institution are between £70,000 and £80,000. The structure is in the Grecian style, and occupies about an acre of ground; it is surmounted by a handsome dome, and on the pediment in front, which is supported by four massive stone pillars, is placed a statue of the benefactor, represented in the attitude of delivering a bible to a youthful figure, whilst with his right hand he is supporting the figure of an aged man. The building cost about £8,000. The apartments for the aged are in the west wing; those for the scholars of the Institution, of whom there are fifty children of the working classes, who are wholly supported and educated in the establishment, are in the east wing. At the back, or south wing, is the Free School, where the children receive a free education, but are supported at home; the number of these averages from two hundred and fifty to three hundred. The western extremity of the town is embellished by Gray's Hospital, a noble and modern structure. Dr. Alexander Gray, of India, a native of Elgin, by will bequeathed £30,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a hospital for the sick poor of this town and county. This building is delightfully seated upon an eminence, and has a fine portico, supported by stately pillars, and surmounted by an elegant dome; the whole is spacious and built of stone, according to a design furnished by Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh. Another handsome building of importance is the Elgin Club House, situated in Commerce street. This building is in the Italian style of architecture and contains a reading room, thirty by twenty-five feet; entrance hall and billiard-room, over forty-one by twenty-five, and eighteen feet in height. There are also card-rooms, keepers' apartments, and all other accessories finished and fitted up in an excellent manner from the designs of Messrs. Reid, of Elgin. The principal street of the town is about a mile in length, widening in the centre, where stands the Established church, a beautiful modern structure, after a plan by Archibald Simpson, Esq.; it is calculated to seat a congregation of two thousand. The western pediment is supported by six massive fluted columns, and at the east end is a lofty tower, surmounted by a figure of Demosthenes' lantern, supported by eight columns. The building cost about £8,000. On the west of it is a raised and spacious pavement, used as a market place for farmers' produce, and also a beautiful fountain, which has an imposing effect. In North street, commencing about the middle of the town, are many fine buildings, particularly the Trinity Lodge Rooms, a handsome edifice erected in 1821, after a design by Mr. Burns, of Edinburgh, at a cost of £3,000. This street is tastefully terminated by the Trinity or Scottish Episcopal chapel, a neat Gothic edifice, erected in 1825. During the last few years Elgin has very considerably increased in extent, and on the south side whole streets of villas have been erected, and many of the old buildings, which obtruded themselves on the front of the High street, have been pulled down and new structures raised in their place. There are two good hotels, the Gordon Arms, in High street, and the Station Hotel, facing the Great North of Scotland Railway station, which have every accommodation for private families and commercial gentlemen. Two newspapers are published here—the Elgin Courant, on Tuesday and Friday, and the Moray and Nairn Express on Saturday. A handsome Town and County Hall has recently been erected, at a cost of upwards of £8,000. It stands upon an eminence, and as seen from the Railway is, with its lofty tower, a very imposing addition to the architectural features of the south side of the town; it is built in the Jacobean style, from plans by Mr. A. Marshall Mackenzie, architect, Aberdeen. An Academy, in the classical style, with Roman-Doric portico, from the plans of Messrs. A. & W. Reid, architects, Elgin, was built in 1886, at a cost of £5,000. The Muckle Cross of Elgin, which was destroyed about 1790, has been restored and presented to the town by Mr. Macandrew, of Westwood House, Essex. It is a fac simile of the former one, and occupies the same site in High street. The cost was £350. In High street are the banking houses—highly respectable branches of the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, the Caledonian Banking Co. Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and a Savings Bank.

The trade of this burgh cannot be considered extensive, being situated in an agricultural district, and principally depending thereupon; it was, however, greatly increased by the opening of the Great North of Scotland and Morayshire Railway. There is a woollen manufactory which employs many hands, and an iron foundry and saw mills. Of the other branches, a trade in corn, wool, and timber is of some consequence, and there is a large tannery, while in the neighbourhood are the famous distilleries of Milton Duff, Glenlossie, and Linkwood, also lime works and a stone quarry. Alexander II., in 1224, granted to the burgesses of Elgin a guild of merchants, which still continues, though the funds of the corporation were, for a considerable period, merged in the common good; connected with the guildry there is a flourishing charity fund from which decayed members and their families derive substantial pensions. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, and twelve councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Cullen, Inverurie, Kintore and Peterhead in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being Alexander Asher, Esq. There are several mineral springs in the vicinity of Elgin, and from the healing virtues of their waters, with the salubrity of the climate, many are supposed to have derived considerable benefit. The weekly corn markets are held on Friday; the cattle markets are held on the third Friday in the months of January, February, March, April, the second Friday in May, the third Tuesday and last Friday in July, the third Tuesday and last Friday in June, August, September and October, and second Friday in November, and the third Wednesday in December. The feeing markets are held on the 26th May, if Friday, if not, Friday before, the first Friday in July (harvest), and the Friday before the 28th November. Population of Elgin in 1871, 8 604, in 1881, 9,843.

ALVES is a small parish some 6½ miles long by 5½ miles wide, situated about 5 miles E. of Elgin. It contains an Established and a Free church, and two schools. Acreage, 9,404. Population in 1881 1,117.

BIRNIE is a parish of 6,777 acres, distant about 3 miles S. of Elgin, and is 7 miles in length, and averages about one and three-fourths in breadth. The church is supposed to be the oldest in Scotland. Population in 1881, 367.

On the opposite bank of the Lossie to that of Elgin is the village of BISHOP MILL, in the parish of New Spynie, the superior of which is the Earl of Seafield. It contains a few of the trades usually found in a country village, corn mills, and a public school.

LOSSIEMOUTH is a large village, in the parish of Drainie, 5 miles N. from Elgin, situated on the banks of the Lossie, at its influx with the Moray Firth, from which locality its name is derived. It is the seaport of Elgin, and was fast advancing into importance, but since 1867 its trade has been gradually declining. Most of the town is regularly laid out, and is a resort for sea-bathers. Several gentlemen, resident in Elgin, have erected villas in which they reside during the summer months. A new harbour was opened in 1839, and has since been improved, which renders it a safe and commodious haven for shipping. The cost of this erection amounted to £20,000. The improvement of the harbour, and the facilities of railway communication, which this village has now enjoyed for several years, have given a stimulus to the trade, which has rendered it one of the most important seaports north of Aberdeen. A new Town Hall was opened on February 2nd, 1885, by Sir George Macpherson Grant, of Ballindalloch, M.P. and Mrs. Dunbar Brander, Pitgaveny. The cost of the building was about £1,100. A new Free church, built on an imposing site commanding an extensive view of the Moray Firth, replaces one destroyed fire some three years ago. It is in the early English Gothic style, and its handsome octagon tower and spire serves as a notable landmark to mariners. It cost upwards of £2,000. The acreage of the parish of Drainie is 6,949, and its population in 1881 was 3,991.

NEW SPYNIE is a parish lying to the north of and adjoining Elgin and contains the village of BISHOP MILL. Acreage, 5,946. Population in 1881, 1,620.

ST. ANDREW'S LHANBRYD.—This parish comprehends what were originally two—St. Andrew's and Lhanbryd—the former including LINKWOOD and BARMUCKITY; the latter lay to the east of St. Andrew's, and comprehended the lands of Coxton, Patnaseir, &c. Acreage, 9,197. Population in 1881, 1,396.

About 3 miles E. of Elgin, and in the above-named parish, is the neat village of LHANBRYD, having a good inn, saw mill, woollen mill, a few well-stored shops, schools, &c. It is noteworthy for its geological productions.

FOCHABERS,

SPEYMOUTH, GARMOUTH, KINGSTON, URQUHART, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FOCHABERS is a small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Bellie, 52 miles E. by N. of Inverness, 12 S.W. of Cullen, 9 E. of Elgin, and 8 N.N.W. of Keith; situated on the great north road from Edinburgh and Aberdeen to Inverness, and occupying a rural site in a deep valley, through which the Spey runs at a little distance to the west of the town. The houses are neatly built, and the streets diverge from a square, in the centre of which stands the parish church, and near to it is an Episcopalian and a Free church; there is also a large chapel for Roman Catholics. An elegant stone bridge, which crossed the Spey near the town, was partly swept away by the great floods which occurred in the summer of 1829; it has subsequently been rebuilt. This is not an important town as respects trade. Its thoroughfare situation contributes somewhat to its prosperity, which is likewise assisted by the genteel neighbourhood by which it is surrounded. Fochabers is a burgh, and is governed by a baron bailie appointed by the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, whose seat (Gordon Castle), graces the vicinity of the town, and is the great object of attraction to and admiration of straugers. It is allowed to be one of the most magnificent structures, and, perhaps, the finest mansion north of the Firth of Forth. The edifice was orginally a gloomy tower in the centre of a morass, called the Bog of Gight, and accessible only by a narrow causeway and a drawbridge. It is now a vast quadrangular structure, the front stretching to the length of 563 feet, surrounded by a beautiful park, and equally beautiful country. It is approached by a gateway at the west end of the town. The body of the building rises to the height of four lofty storeys, and on each end is a pavilion of two storeys, connected by a gallery of two lower storeys. The ancient tower, which is 90 feet high, overlooks the whole structure, and commands a view of the entire plain, with all its waving woods and the windings of the river Spey. The busts and pictures which grace the interior of this noble residence are most valuable, comprising many rare and original gems of art. At the eastern end of the town stands an elegant building in the Elizabethan style of architecture; this is a free school, founded by Alexander Milne, Esq., a native of Fochabers. By his will, dated New Orleans, 17th October, 1836, he bequeathed to the parishes of Bellie and Ordifish the sum of 100,000 dollars for establishing a free school. The cost of erecting the building amounted to £4,338, about £17,000 being invested in heritable security, yielding an annual income of £740, by means of which 500 children are educated.

The parish of BELLIE, of which Fochabers is the kirk town, is partly in this county and partly in Banffshire. It is 6 miles in length by 4 in breadth, bounded by the sea on the north, and on the south-east by Rathven and Boharm. The county of Moray comes here, east of the Spey to a small extent, and on this piece of ground, which is in the parish of Bellie, stands the town of Fochabers. Fairs are held at Fochabers on the third Thursdays in January and February, fourth Wednesday in March, fourth Thursday in April, fourth Thursday in May, first Thursday in July, second Wednesday in August, and first Thursdays in October and December. The entire parish of Bellie, which covers an area of 12,927 acres, contained in 1881 a population of 2,365, of which 1,189 belonged to Fochabers.

URQUHART is a parish of 13,066 acres, extending from the river Spey to the river Lossie, a distance of about 6 miles, the breadth being about 5 miles. The village of Urquhart is very small, and about a mile and a half from Lhanbryd. The population of Urquhart parish in 1881 was 2,139.

GARMOUTH and KINGSTON are small villages in the quoad sacra parish of SPEYMOUTH, but locally in the civil parish of Urquhart, with which parish the population is returned; they are between 4 and 5 miles N.W. of Fochabers, the former situated at the mouth of the Spey, on its left bank. The principal trade is ship building, and the exportation of corn, timber, and salmon—of the latter considerable quantities are sent principally to London and other southern markets. The imports are guano, bone manure, timber and coal. The port formerly had a good harbour, formed by the mouth of the Spey, and here a number of vessels have been built entirely of native wood. A fair is held on the 30th of June (new style).

FORRES,

FINDHORN, KINLOSS, RAFFORD, DYKE, AND MOY.

FORRES is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of its name, and the seat of a presbytery; 201 miles N. by W. from Edinburgh, by way of Aberdeen, 165 by way of Brechin and Huntly, 75 N.W. of Aberdeen, 27 N.E. of Inverness, 21 W. of Fochabers, 20 E. of Fort George, 12 W. by S. of Elgin, and 11 E. of Nairn. It is a neatly-built clean town, and stands on rising ground, at a distance of about five miles from the village, and two from the bay of Findhorn, which is its seaport. Forres is noted for one of the most remarkable stone obelisks of ancient date in Britain. This interesting object stands at the east end of the town, and is supposed to commemorate a pacification concluded here between Malcolm II. and Sweno, a Danish invader, about the beginning of the 11th century. It is an enormous slab of grey stone, upwards of twenty feet in height, supported by a socket which conceals at least three feet more, and the shape resembles that of a very long wedge, or, as some fancifully describe it, a highland broad-sword; the figures upon the obelisk, which are presumed to represent a battle and subsequent treaty, are wonderfully distinct, considering that they must have withstood the assaults of wind and weather during the last eight centuries. At the western extremity of the town, on an eminence, once stood a castle, wherein Duffus, one of the early Kings of Scotland, was perfidiously killed by Donald, governor of the fortress, which circumstance, it is said, Shakespeare has made use of in his dramatic version of the murder of King Duncan by Macbeth; and it was on the waste in the neighbourhood that that hero, along with Banquo (according to the old historians) met the "weird sisters," who gave him so many fatal promises. The exact spot on which that event is asserted by the country people to have taken place is marked by a small clump of trees, about two hundred yards north from the post road between Forres and Nairn, near the toll bar, five miles from the former of these places, and nearly on the confines of the two counties of Moray and Nairn. The extensive heath still surrounding this place is visibly worthy of the epithet "blasted," being one of the most desolate tracts of waste land anywhere to be seen. On the castle eminence has been erected an obelisk to the memory of Dr. Thomson, who sacrificed his life by over exertion in his attention to the wounded Russians, after the famous battle of Alma. Upon an eminence to the south-east of the town stands a tower erected by the inhabitants of Forres in honour of Lord Nelson, the walk to which, as it winds round the hill, is extremely pleasant. From its elevated situation, a fine view is hence obtained, and the object is a conspicuous one for a considerable distance. Sloping to the north, where the river Findhorn sweeps round from the south-west through the Forest of Darnaway, is a modern mansion, the seat of the Earl of Moray. Adjoining to it is the old castle, a noble hall, built by Earl Randolph, regent of Scotland during the minority of David Bruce, capable of containing one thousand men under arms. Here Mary Queen of Scots held her court in 1566. Formerly the heron was so numerous in this part, that whole flocks, it is said, at times darkened the air, and drowned with their cries the sound of the gushing waters. About two miles below, the river, which is the estuary of Findhorn Bay, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, which was erected by a joint stock company, in shares of £10 each. The trade of Forres is not of an extensive character. Dye works, manufactories for woollens, boots and shoes and bobbins, chemical works and flour mills being the principal branches. There are four branch banking establishments, and several good hotels. A newspaper is published in the town, styled the Forres, Elgin and Nairn Gazette, on Wednesday. Owing to the configuration of the country round about Forres, the burgh enjoys a remarkable immunity from rain, the rainfall for the past few years having been ascertained from accurate observations to be about the lowest in Scotland, and this circumstance and the soil being porous mark out Forres as an excellent health resort. Cluny Hill House, which stands on one of the beautiful eminences in the immediate vicinity of the town, was built expressly for a hydropathic establishment, and its situation is peculiarly favourable for invalids. There are two masonic lodges in the town. Forres is a royal burgh, and governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and eleven councillors. The burgh unites with Nairn, Fortrose and Inverness, in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being Robert B. Finlay, Esq. A sheriff small debt court sits once in every two months for the recovery of debt not exceeding £12. In the centre of the High street is a substantial structure surmounted by a spire. The building comprises the gaol, a court house, a council room, &c., and near to this stands a handsome market cross, in the style of Sir Walter Scott's monument in Edinburgh. The Mechanics' Institute, also in High street, a fine building, the free property of the burgh, possesses a library, reading room, and two public halls; the large hall is of recent erection, and is capable of seating 1,000 persons. At the south-east end is a good stone edifice, erected in 1824, called Anderson's Institution, for educating children of the humble classes of Forres, Rafford, and Kinloss, founded by Jonathan Anderson, Esq., a native of Forres, and opposite to it stands the public school. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and others for congregations of Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Evangelical Union, and Baptists. A corn market is held every Tuesday, and a cattle market every alternate Tuesday; cattle sales are also held in the auction mart every Tuesday. Feeing markets for hiring servants are held on the Saturday before the 26th of May (called Whitsunday market), and the Saturday before the 22nd of November (called Martinmas market), all new style. The population of the entire parish of Forres was in 1881, 4,752; of this number 4,081 were returned for the royal and parliamentary burgh.

FINDHORN is a small village and seaport in the parish of Kinloss, 5 miles N. of Forres, of which it may be considered the port. It lies at the point of land which is rendered peninsular by the bay of Burghead on the east, and the harbour of Findhorn on the west. The latter is convenient, and possesses a share of coasting trade in the exportation of salmon, corn, bark, potatoes, and wood; the latter article is principally shipped to Newcastle and Sunderland, where it is used for props in the coalpits. The imports consist of coal, guano, slate, tiles, lime, and different kinds of goods. The village was connected by a branch line three miles in length with the Inverness and Junction Aberdeen Railway, but since its discontinuance the trade has rapidly declined. The places of worship are the Established church, at Kinloss, and a Free church, at Findhorn, there are also public schools at both places. The parish of Kinloss, the acreage of which is 5,184, contained in 1881, 1,072 persons; of this number Findhorn possessed 605.

DYKE and MOY is a parish situated on the river Findhorn and the Moray Firth. It is about 4 miles W. of Forres, and in length it is about 6 by a breadth of 3½ miles. At BRODIE, in this parish, is a station on the Highland Railway. There is an Established church, and a Free church, and also a public school. The parish of Dyke and Moy comprises 13,579 acres, and contained in 1881, 1,236 persons.

RAFFORD is a parish 3 miles S.E. of Forres, situated on the river Findhorn. In length it is about 8 by a breadth of 4 miles. The places of worship are one of the Established and a new Free church. A market for cattle is held on the second Wednesday in November. Acreage, 12,456. Population in 1881, 1,052.

GRANTOWN,

CROMDALE, INVERALLAN, AND STRATHSPEY.

GRANTOWN is a neat modern village in the parish of Cromdale, the latter lying formerly in this county and that of Inverness, but by a recent Act of Parliament the whole of the parish is incorporated with this county. Grantown is situated in that district of the parish called Inverallan, on the north bank of the Spey, rather more than a mile south from Castle Grant, one of the seats of the Dowager Countess of Seafield, and at the distance of 35 miles S.E. from Inverness, 22 S. from Forres, 8 N.E. from Duthill, and 6 N. from Abernethy. Grantown was begun about the year 1774, under the patronage of the Grant family, who have been its continued benefactors; and a large number of the inhabitants retain the name of Grant to the present day. It is a great attraction for visitors from Edinburgh and Glasgow during the summer months, and during the last three years several handsome villas have been built for their accommodation. In 1887 the Highland railway erected a commodious station, which is situated about a mile from the centre of the village. There is also a station on the Great North of Scotland line, a mile and a half distant. The trade of the place is of a retail and domestic character, and there is a fair proportion of the ordinary useful shops and businesses which are found in a small country town. There is a distillery in its vicinity, and a large and extensive wholesale and retail grocery and drapery business carried on by Macdougall & Co.; and in the village are established three banks—namely branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Caledonian Banking Company, Limited; there is also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank. There are also three excellent and commodious hotels—the Black Bull, Grant Arms, and Strathspey. Besides the parish church in Cromdale, there is a quoad sacra parish church, a handsome stone edifice, built in 1884 by Caroline Stuart, Dowager Countess of Seafield, a Free church, and a Baptist chapel in Grantown. A Sheriff Small Debt Circuit Court is held on the first Wednesday after the 15th of January, and first Wednesday in May and September. There are several schools, noticed under their proper head, and also an orphan institution. A neat Cottage Hospital was built in 1884 by the Dowager Countess of Seafield in memory of Ian Charles, late Earl of Seafield.

Fairs are held on the Tuesday after the 12th and Monday before third Wednesday in January, Monday before third Wednesday in February, Monday before third Wednesday in March (cattle, horses, sheep, and hiring), Thursday before third Wednesday in April (sheep), Monday after third Wednesday in April (horses, cattle, and sheep), Monday after second Wednesday in May (horses, cattle, and sheep), last Tuesday in April (hiring), Monday after Beauly, for horses, cattle, and sheep, and first Friday (Figget Fair) in June, Monday after third Thursday in July (horses, cattle, and sheep), first Wednesday (shearers'), and Monday after third Tuesday (horses, cattle, and sheep) in August; Monday after third Tuesday in September (horses, cattle, and sheep), Monday after third Tuesday in October (cattle and sheep), Monday after second Wednesday horses, &c.), and first Thursday (hiring) in November. The parish (of Cromdale has an area of 70,120 acres, and in 1881 contained a population numbering 3,642, of which 1,374 were returned for Grantown.

KNOCKANDO WITH ARCHIESTOWN.

KNOCKANDO is a parish, situated on the north side of the river Spey, with Rothes on the east, Dalles and Birnie on the north, and Cromdale and Edenkillie on the west. Its length is about 15 miles by a breadth of about 6, enclosing an area of 28,134 statute acres. The country is hilly, and generally pastoral. In 1829 severe floods occurred in Moray, and this parish suffered very seriously, many families being rendered quite destitute. The burn of Knockando, a small rivulet, was on this occasion swollen to a size equal to that of the Spey in its ordinary state. There is an Established church, and in ARCHIESTOWN, a village in this parish, is a Free church and one for the United Presbyterians. The population of the parish was in 1881, 1,838; of the latter number 375 were returned for Archiestown.

ROTHES

IS a parish partly in the county of Elgin and partly in that of Banff. It is bounded on the south by Knockando, on the north by Elgin, Birnie, &c., and on the east by the river Spey; it is 9 miles in length by an average breadth of 3, embracing 19,816 statute acres. The town, which was formed into a police burgh, in 1884, is about 60 miles W. N. W. from Aberdeen, and 10 S. from Elgin, situated near the western bank of the Spey. The name is derived from Ruddk-ius, signifying "red water," from the colour of the soil of which the banks of its streams are composed. The Great North of Scotland Railway have a station here, and the Highland Railway Company one at ORTON, in the lower end of the parish. The places of worship are Established and Free churches. There are three distilleries in the town, the chief of which is the Glen Grant Glenlivet Distillery, established in 1840: mention may also be made of the Macallan Distillery, located in the neighbourhood. The parish contained in 1881, a population numbering 2,201, of which 1,382 were returned for the town.

FIFESHIRE.

THIS is an extensive, populous, and important county, lying on the eastern side of Scotland. It is a peninsula, having the Firth of Forth on the south, the German Ocean on the east, and the Tay on the north, which river separates it from Forfarshire and Perthshire; on the west it is bounded by the latter county and Kinross, with a small part of Clackmannan. The breadth from its eastern apex to its western point, where it intersects Kinross and Perth, is about thirty-five miles; towards the south, however (from Kinghorn to the verge of Kinross-shire), it is not more than ten miles across; the extreme length, from north-east to south-west, in a curved line, is fully forty miles. The regularity of its figures is much interrupted by the intrusion of Kinross-shire, which creates a considerable indentation, not far from its centre, on the west. Its superfices comprise 513 square miles, or 328,427 English acres. In regard to size, this county is sixteenth, and in population the seventh.

EARLY HISTORY.—At an early period the district of Fyfe included Kinross-shire, Clackmannanshire, and part of the counties of Perth and Stirling; it was then designated Ross, a term signifying a peninsula, and seems to have been under one general jurisdiction. This large territory has long since been dismembered—Clackmannan was first taken from it, and next Kinross was erected into a distinct shire. The origin of the name "Fife" has much troubled etymologists, nor has a satisfactory conclusion ever been arrived at upon this subject. The monkish chroniclers assume its derivation from one Fyfus Duffus, a hero of whom nothing more appears to be known than that he was a chieftain who performed some great exploits, and did the country essential service in war. The ancient history of Fife is enveloped in nearly similar obscurity. Its original possessors were the Celts, and their invaders the Romans; and towards the close of the ninth century the King of the Scots obtained paramount sway over the district. Between this period and the eleventh century the country was in a great measure either the property or under the jurisdiction of a succession of "thanes" of the title of Macduff; one of these, Duncan Macduff, was created Earl of Fife by Malcolm III., about 1057; and from this time till the family honours were merged by the marriage of female heirs or extinction in other families, and finally lost by forfeiture in 1424, the Earls of Fife were amongst the most influential of the Scottish peerage. After a lapse of more than three centuries, the ancient title of Earl of Fife was revived as an Irish peerage, in 1759, in the person of William Duff, Lord Braco of Kilbryde, who, according to his genealogists, derived his descent from the original earls. The lineal descendant of this person now inherits the title and privileges—the estates of the family being situated principally in Aberdeenshire and Banffshire.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND CLIMATE.—The peninsula of Fife was originally almost an entire forest, full of swamps, and while in this condition was the haunt of wild beasts, especially swine of a monstrous size. It is understood that such animals were not extirpated in the reign of James V., who, like his forefathers, often made Fife the scene of his hunting expeditions. In this county are found four kinds of soil, differing considerably in quality, and generally occupying distinct tracts of the country. Along the braes facing the Firth of Forth, the composition of the land is for the most part excellent, being deep, rich loam, good clay, and gravel mixed with loamy earth, based chiefly on whin rock, and produces good crops of wheat, barley, oats, beans, turnips and potatoes; north from the waving line which bounds this territory to the base of the hills on the south side of the vale of Fife, and from St. Andrews on the east to the western parts of the county, the soil is in general vastly inferior—a great proportion being cold, poor and very wet clay; the tract of the "Howe of Fife," which comprises both sides of the river Eden as far as Cupar, is very productive; it consists of loam, partly deep and moist, and partly light and dry, with also a considerable proportion of moor and moss; in the hilly district, from the vale to the river Tay, the land is uniformly of the best description, having much rich loam, clay and gravel. Consequent upon the progressive operation of habitual and experimental cultivation, these primitive properties of the soil have been modified, improved, or ameliorated, according to the system or means and perseverance of the agriculturist. The peninsula of Fife exhibits on its surface a series of vales, stretching from west to east parallel with the sea on each side, and of greater or less dimensions; these vales, which from the undulating character of the country are in some places not so distinct as in others, are the basins of different small streams, which merge either in the Firth of Forth or St. Andrew's Bay. Extending in a north-easterly direction to the Tay, the Ochil Hills penetrate the county, forming a ridge of moderate elevation, upon which many cattle and sheep are pastured. The other eminences of greatest altitude in Fifeshire are Kelly Law, 800 feet; Norman's Law, 850; Largo Law, 1,020; East Lomond Hill, 1,260; and West Lomond Hill, 1,280 feet above the level of the sea. The CLIMATE of this peninsula is, perhaps, as genial and salubrious as that of other districts more to the south; the fogs, which formerly were continually exhaling from the lochs and marshes, to the injury of the crops and the health of the inhabitants, who were then afflicted with agues and other concomitant diseases, have long since been effectually dissipated by the drainage of the damp lands, and the general spread of healthful cultivation. Altogether, Fife is a most important district; its agricultural prosperity and capabilities, its manufactures, its fisheries, and its mineral treasures, its burghs, seaports, and fine harbours, and its domestic and foreign commerce, form a combination of advantages that must distinguish this shire as one of the most favoured probably in North Britain.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The shire is fortunate in possessing inexhaustible mines of coal, with whinstone, sandstone, limestone, and some ironstone. Coal and lime are wrought only in the southern division of the county, between the two extremities, and some miles inland; within this district there are as extensive lime and coal works as can be seen in Scotland. The sandstone found in this part is of the very best quality; from its beauty it is exported to Edinburgh, where some of the finest edifices have been built with it. Marl is abundant in some places; so likewise is fine clay, for the composition of bricks, tiles and pottery. From the possession of the above fossils, and the exuberant produce of corn and cattle, it is a common saying among the people of Fife, that their county could support itself better, without the aid of imported articles, than any other district in Scotland. Besides supplying home consumption, it has a very large export trade in corn, potatoes, pigs, black cattle, lime, coal and sandstone—not to mention that of its manufactured goods. Lead has been discovered in the western Lomond, and mines of this ore have been profitably worked in the parish of Kemback; pebbles, much admired for the high polish of which they are susceptible, have been found in different places, with agates and rubies of fine water. The staple MANUFACTURE of Fife is linen goods, in the weaving of which many towns, villages, and hamlets are busily employed without intermission; fine diapers and shirtings, and the most elegant table linen, are produced from the looms of this county; of this trade Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy are the principal seats; while the yarns, composed of foreign flax, are mostly spun and bleached on the Leven and in the adjacent places. Iron founding and machine making are prosecuted with success at several places, and the manufacture of fishing nets, floor cloth, fire clay and terra cotta goods are likewise branches of importance. The fisheries are also a source of wealth to this county, shoals of herrings during the spawning season visiting its coast, in the capturing and curing of which many of the population are employed. Turbot, soles, plaice, cod, haddock and ling are also found in abundance, the three first-named being taken in the shallow waters on the east coast.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—Exclusive of the Forth and the Tay, the county is watered by several streams—none of which, however, are entitled to the denomination of river, except the Eden and the Leven, both of which abound with excellent salmon. Fife cannot boast of many lakes, and those that it does possess are but of small extent, the principal being Lindores, Kilconquhar, Lochgelly, Camilla and Fitty lochs. The North British line of railway runs direct through the county on the sea board, from Burntisland to St. Andrews, having various branches running landwards, to the counties of Clackmannan, Kinross and Perth, exclusive of the various branches for mineral traffic leading to the different shipping ports on the northern banks of the Forth. The route of the respective branches will be best ascertained by reference to the towns given in the Directory of the shire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county forms a sheriffdom, under one sheriff depute; but being divided into an eastern and a western district, each is placed under the jurisdiction of a sheriff substitute; in these two districts are comprehended the four subdivisions of St. Andrews, Cupar, Dunfermline, and Kirkcaldy. It has politically and ecclesiastically attached to it the islands of Inchcolm, Inchkeith, and May, in the Firth of Forth. Fife comprises sixty-one parishes, and two parts of parishes, having thirteen royal burghs with parliamentary representation; these conjointly with Culross in Perthshire, Queensferry in Linlithgowshire, and Stirling in Stirlingshire, return three members. The shire formerly returned but one representative, but is now separated into the East and West Divisions, each of which sends a member. The gentlemen now sitting are: East Division, Herbert H. Asquith, Esq.; West Division, The Hon. Robert Preston Bruce. The parliamentary constituency for 1888-9 is: East Division, 9,059; West Division, 8,812. The lord lieutenant is Sir Robert Anstruther, Bart. By the census returns for 1871, the population of the entire shire was—males, 75,127; females, 85,608; total, 160,735; in 1881 the shire contained 80,893 males, and 91,038 females; total, 171,931; exhibiting an increase over 1871 of 11,196. The valuation of the county for 1888-9 is £629,724; of railways and waterworks, £73,708.

ABERDOUR

IS a parish and village—the latter, which is also a seaport, is 10 miles N.W. from Edinburgh (across the Firth of Forth), 9 S.W. from Kirkcaldy, 10 S.E. from Dunfermline, and 3 W. from Burntisland, the nearest railway station. The new line of railway at present (1888) in course of construction from Burntisland to Inverkeithing in connection with the Forth Bridge scheme, will have a station at Aberdour. This district formerly belonged to the monastery of Inchcolm. The small island of Inchcolm now belongs to the parish of Aberdour, the form of the latter being nearly square, measuring about three miles and a half each way, and containing 5,974 acres; it lies along the north bank of the Forth, and is divided into two districts by a small ridge of hills which run from east to west. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and belonged in the twelfth century to the family of the Euponts, from whom it passed to the Mortimers by marriage, afterwards to the Douglasses, one of whom, in 1457, was created Lord Aberdour and Earl of Morton, whose castle, which stood close to the village, was burnt down by accident about a century and a half ago. Aberdour is a place of summer resort of the citizens of Edinburgh and their families, there being good bathing grounds here, and the exposure being sunny and warm. One of the chief causes of its popularity as a bathing place is the ready access which is obtained by steam vessels and other means of conveyance from the opposite shore. In the village are Established, Free, and Episcopal churches; there are also two Board schools in the parish. Donibristle Park, the seat of the Right Hon. George Earl of Moray, is beautifully situated at the east end of the village, overlooking the Forth. Population of the parish in 1881, 1736.

ANSTRUTHER (EAST AND WEST),

CELLARDYKE, AND THE PARISH OF KILRENNY.

ANSTRUTHER EAST, a royal burgh, and a station on the Leven and East of Fife branch of the North British Railway, in the county of Fife, is 22 miles N.E. from Kirkcaldy, and about 10 S.E. from St. Andrews by road, but 15 by rail. It is bounded on the north by Kilrenny, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Cellardyke, and on the west by Anstruther West. It was a place of great importance before the union with England, carrying on an extensive trade with Holland and France; and from its contiguity with Cellardyke, it is still one of the first fishing stations in Scotland. Fish curing is the staple trade. In 1825, there were only 58 boats, from 18 to 20 feet long; now the number is about 260, from 50 feet long. The harbour was found too small for the increasing trade of the district, and the three burghs of the East and West Anstruthers and Cellardyke united their efforts to obtain, with Government assistance, an union harbour, which has cost about £56,000. The present harbours (inner and outer) give a space of 13½ acres, and will accommodate 500 fishing boats, and admit vessels from 200 to 500 tons burthen at half flood; there is about four feet of water at the East Quay at the lowest spring tide. The trade, in addition to fish curing, is of a domestic nature; fish curing, and the manufacture of nets, oilskin, and fishing material are the most prominent branches but there is likewise a considerable amount of business done in the export of grain, potatoes, &c. Anstruther was until recently the terminus of the Leven and East of Fife Branch of the North British Railway, but on the 1st of June, 1887, the line was opened for through traffic to St. Andrews and Dundee. It is the station of a custom house, whose district extends to Crail. Branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, are settled here. The town is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and nine councillors, elected under the Scotch Burgh Reform Act. A sheriff's small debt court is held here quarterly, for the parishes of Anstruther East and West, Elie, Kilconquhar, Kilrenny, Newburn, Pittenweem, St. Monance, and Crail. A weekly corn market is held on Friday. This burgh is united with St. Andrews, Cupar, Crail, Kilrenny, Anstruther West, and Pittenweem, in returning one member to Parliament. It is worthy of note that Dr. Chalmers, the celebrated orator and divine, and Professor Tennant, author of "Anster Fair," were natives of this town, and also Professor Goodsir, of the Edinburgh University. In addition to the Established church, there are a Free church, an United Presbyterian church, and Evangelical and Baptist chapels; also public schools and a private seminary for young ladies. The chief educational establishment here is the Waid Academy, which was opened September 6th, 1886. It was endowed mainly from funds mortified by Andrew Waid, lieutenant in the Royal Navy, a native of Anstruther Easter, who died in 1803. His will, which was dated in the year 1800, narrates that he had through life entertained a very favourable opinion of the Royal Navy and been much attached to its prosperity, and that he had for several years deliberately entertained a resolution, after making some provision for his relations and connections, to appropriate his whole heritable and moveable estate for the building of an academy for the accommodation of orphan boys and seamen's boys in indigent circumstances, and for their maintenance, clothing and such education as would instruct them in the great principle of the Christian religion, and fit them for serving in the British Navy with reputation, to the end that religion and the Navy might flourish and advance to the end of time. The trustees acting under the will were of opinion that the funds left by the deceased were inadequate for the full accomplishment of his design, and besides, that under the changed conditions of naval warfare, a hospital at Anstruther, for the purpose contemplated by Lieutenant Waid, would now be of comparatively little value. The amount of the Trust estate at his death was about £5,000, but at the time of the transfer to the governors of the academy it was of the value of about £15,000. Accordingly a scheme promoted by the Trustees and by the School Board of Anstruther Easter and others was laid before the commissioners under the Education Endowments (Scotland) Act, 1882, and with some amendments was adopted by them, and approved by Her Majesty the Queen in Council on August 11th, 1884. Lieutenant Waid in his will expressed a hope that his intentions might be greatly aided and extended by the charitable contributions of many good members of society, and in accordance with that anticipation Stephen Williamson, Esq., M.P., has contributed £1,000 towards the funds. The school, which is built of stone with a tower in the centre, has a fine commanding appearance. The population of the burgh, parliamentary and royal, was in 1881, 1,349.

ANSTRUTHER WEST, which adjoins Anstruther East, is also a parish and royal burgh, and holds its charter of incorporation from James IV., in 1587. A bridge connects the two burghs. It is bounded on the north by other land in the parish of Anstruther West, on the south by the Frith of Forth, on the east by Anstruther East, and on the west by Pittenweem. This burgh was disfranchised in 1853, when three managers were appointed by the Court of Session. In 1869 it again recovered its municipal status, and is now governed by a chief magistrate, one bailie, a treasurer, and nine councillors. The inhabitants are principally employed in agricultural pursuits. Great improvements have been effected in this town within the last forty years; among these must be noticed the widening of the main street from thirteen to thirty feet, its being macadamised, and the formation of a neat footway or pavement, at an expense of £450, contributed equally by the burgh and the county. The place is supplied with water, the streets well lighted, common sewers and other conveniences constructed, whereby the public thoroughfares and lanes are kept in a clean and orderly state. A parish church manse and offices for the clergyman, and a parochial school and dwelling house for the schoolmaster, were also erected. Population in 1881, 673.

KILRENNY is a parish and royal burgh; the former is situated one mile from Anstruther, and three from Crail. The parish approaches a circular form, having a diameter of about two miles. It is bounded on the north by Carnbee, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Crail, and on the west by the two Anstruthers. The coast here is one continued range of rocks, with two small creeks, which form the harbour of Anstruther, and the port of Cellardyke, or Nether Kilrenny. Here is an Established church, and there are a quoad sacra church at Cellardyke, and two public schools. This burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors, and in conjunction with the Anstruthers, and other places before named, returns one member to Parliament. The population of the entire parish in 1881 was 3,270, 101 of this number being included in the parliamentary burgh of East Anstruther.

The village of CELLARDYKE (or NETHER KILRENNY) is an extensive fishing village in the above parish, and is contiguous to Anstruther, before described, forming part of the burgh of Kilrenny. There is a small harbour for fishing boats here. The three burghs are so contiguous to each other that to a stranger the separation is not discernible. It takes its name from the circumstance of containing cellars or store houses for lodging fish. The greater number of the inhabitants are fishermen, about 200 boats belonging to the place. There has recently been erected and presented to the burgh by Stephen Williamson, Esq., and the representatives of the late Jas. Fowler, Esq., natives of Cellardyke, a handsome Town Hall, which includes council, reading and amusement rooms. The nearest railway station is at Anstruther, about half a mile distant.

AUCHTERMUCHTY,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF DUNSHALT.

AUCHTERMUCHTY, signifying in Gaelic, "The Cottage of the King," is a parish and a royal burgh; the latter 22 miles s.w. from Dundee, 19 w. from St. Andrews, 14 s.s.e. from Perth, 5 s. from Newburgh, 15 N. from Kirkcaldy, and 28 nearly due north from Edinburgh. A station of the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British railway is adjacent to the town, and there is one at LADYBANK, a junction on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the above-named railway, about five miles distant. The land in the vicinity of the town is remarkably rich and fertile, and the climate is considered very salubrious. Auchtermuchty is situated on the road from Kinross to Cupar Fife, ten miles from the former and nine from the latter town. It is irregularly built, many of the houses are thatched and low, but the greater portion are of a superior appearance. There is a good substantial mansion in the town, which was once the residence of the Thane of Fife. A stream of water called Lover's pool runs through the town, dividing it into nearly two equal parts. This place was constituted a royal burgh by James IV., which charter was confirmed by James VI., and it still enjoys all the privileges arising therefrom. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, twelve councillors, a treasurer and town clerk, and has a sheriff's small debt court, which is held quarterly. A considerable trade is carried on here in manufacturing linen. Malting and distilling are likewise engaged in, and the making of scales, beams and weighing machines has been established here for upwards of a century. There are branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland and Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and a Savings bank. The Victoria Hall, erected in 1865, is a building well worthy of notice.

The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and one for Baptists. The parish church is an old structure enlarged, and situated near the centre of the town. There are two Board schools in the town, and a large school conducted on the Madras principle is numerously attended. The North Board school, 75 feet in length by 21 in breadth, can be divided into three apartments, or class-rooms, by two sliding partitions; it was erected at an expense of upwards of £700. The People's Institute, commenced by a few ladies and gentlemen for the improvement of the working population, comprises reading, recreation, and temperance refreshment rooms. There is also another reading room in the town, and a well stocked library. There is a weekly corn market on Monday, and fairs are held on the first Monday in February, last Monday in April, July 2nd, first Monday in October and December. Acreage of the parish, 3,530. Population in 1881, 2,322.

DUNSHALT is a small village situated about one mile s. from and in the parish of Auchtermuchty, where there is a linen factory and a Board school. Auchtermuchty railway station is about half a mile distant. Population in 1881, 414.

BURNTISLAND

IS a royal and parliamentary burgh and seaport, railway terminus and metropolitan ferry, situated on the north shore of the Firth of Forth, and in the centre of the south boundary of the parish to which it gives its name. It is distant 9½ miles N. by W. from Edinburgh, 16 S.E. from Kinross, 6 S.W. from Kirkcaldy, and 3 S. from Aberdour. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, and twelve councillors. The town council are also the police commissioners, the local authority, and four members of the town council with four representatives from the N. B. Railway Company constitute the Harbour Commissioners. There is besides a parochial board, but having jurisdiction solely of poor law business. The town council, acting under the Burial Grounds Act, acquired five acres of ground at Bentfield for a new cemetery, at a cost of about £4,000. For school board purposes there are two boards—one for the burgh and another for the parish, but the latter has made an arrangement with the former for school accommodation, and only one set of officials exists, with central schools for both burgh and parish. The municipal, police and parliamentary boundaries have been made identical by an Act obtained in 1876. The first election, under the new Act took place on the 1st November, 1876. On the same day a section of the Act granting the same powers to the magistrates as are at present possessed by the sheriff and justices of peace under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, came into operation. This admits of the administration of justice in nautical cases being conducted in the town instead of in Kirkcaldy as previously. Burntisland is now the headquarters of the custom house business for the district, which embraces the line of coast from Aberdour to Anstruther. The burgh of Burntisland is one of the Kirkcaldy district of burghs represented by Sir George Campbell, K.C.S.I., of Edenwood, Fifeshire. There are police and bailie courts, the sheriff courts for the burgh being held weekly at Kirkcaldy. There are branches of the National and Commercial Banks of Scotland, Limited, and a savings bank, an Established church, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians, a Roman Catholic chapel, and an Episcopal church and school, a public school, a variety of benefit societies, and a railway institute and reading room. New Board schools were erected here in 1876, at a cost of £6,000, in the Elizabethan style; they are situated in front of a hill rising more than 100 feet above the level of the sea. Two wings have recently been added to the original buildings in order to accommodate the increasing number of scholars. The playgrounds are ample, and the terrace in front is tastefully laid out. There are no weekly markets, but there is an annual fair held on the third Friday in July.

Previous to the Union, Burntisland was a place of great trade, particularly with Holland. Since 1603 its trade declined till 1848, when the opening of the Fife railway imparted an impetus to the export trade in coal and pig iron. Since the opening of the new dock the harbour revenue, then £2 200 annually, has since increased till in 1883 it amounted to £27,055. This dock, built by Mr. Walter Scott, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, from plans by Messrs. T. Meik and Sons, C.E. comprises an area of 5½ acres, and cost about £100,000, including railway connections and hydraulic loading machinery by Sir William Armstrong & Co. of Newcastle-on-Tyne. The depth of water in the dock is 24ft. 0in. at high water of spring tides, and 19ft. 0in. at neap tides; the width of entrance is 60ft. The railway to Aberdour and Inverkeithing, in connection with the Forth Bridge scheme, is now (1888) in course of construction. It will open up a picturesque district some eight miles in extent. The cost of the line is estimated at £140,000, and it is to be opened for traffic contemporaneous with the opening of the Forth Bridge route. The line enters Burntisland by a long viaduct, which passes at the bottom of the High street and crosses Harbour place, reaching the main line about two hundred yards east of the present terminus. The want of a direct line to the coalfields has been much felt, and this line will bring those in the west of Fife into closer communication with the Harbour of Burntisland. The herring curing trade, which used to be very flourishing, may now be said to be extinct, although Burntisland is still a fishing station for the Firth Fishery, a number of boats being annually engaged in the winter herring fishing. Messrs. Young & Co.'s distillery at Grange, about a mile from the town (now converted into a Limited Liability Company), is celebrated for the purity of spirits manufactured there, which of late years has been greatly increased. The very extensive works of the Burntisland Oil Co. Limited, about one mile from the town, were opened in 1882, and at present give employment to about 800 hands. The music hall, built by the late Joseph Young, of Dunearn, and presented to the town by his trustees, accommodates 400, and is frequently used for lectures, concerts, and public meetings. The only mortification belonging to Burntisland is Watson's, consisting of the annual rent of the East Binnlands, amounting to an average of £60, which is divided between three widows and the Board schoolmaster for the education of poor children.

The railway locomotive works, situated between the Lammerlaws and the old town, employed 300 men previous to the amalgamation of the Fife Railway and the North British, but scarcely one-third of that number of hands is now retained here, and the best machinery has been removed to Cowlairs, Glasgow. At the station, which is a handsome structure, is the Forth Hotel, formerly the parish manse, but acquired by the late Sir John Gladstone, who built the ferry pier and the present manse, which he exchanged for the hotel buildings. The present gasworks also owe their origin to Sir John, who sold them to the Fife Railway Company, by whom they were transferred to the North British, when their line was amalgamated with that system. The gasworks have now become the property of the burgh, and are managed by the members of the town council as a gas commission. Burntisland is largely frequented by visitors, who in the summer months add considerably to its population. The only object of antiquity connected with Burntisland is Rossend Castle, built in 1119, by the Abbots of Dunfermline. It occupies a very picturesque situation, and its windows are so arranged that one or other of them catches sunshine every instant of its duration throughout the year. It was the residence of Cromwell during the occupation of Burntisland by his troops, and was a favourite resting place of Queen Mary. Rossend is now the property of James Shepherd, Esq., who takes a great interest in antiquarian researches but there are still vaults remaining unexplored.

The parish, originally a portion of Kinghorn, is three miles square and consists of the Binn and Dunearn ranges of hills, with the High Beuts on the east side of the town, extending into Kinghorn parish. Some portions of the hills contain fine specimens of basaltic columns. They are irruptive through limestone and sandstone strata. The sandstone quarries at Grange and Newbigging give out extensive supplies of stone for buildings in the neighbourhood, and quantities are shipped at Starleyburn for other places. The limestone mine, belonging to the Carron Co., at Starleyburn, has been shut up in the meantime, owing to the depression in the iron trade. It was formerly worked on the east hills, and the exhausted workings there are objects of interest to the tourist, who also finds agreeable walks towards Dunearn, the back of the Binn and Kinghorn both by the new and old roads. The rock which marks the spot where Alexander III. met his death in 1286, is situated beyond the limits of the parish on the south side of the new Kinghorn road, and is now marked by a handsome monument, which will be found more fully described under the Historical notice of Kinghorn. Burntisland was originally a burgh of regality under the Abbot of Dunfermline. In the year 1541 it was purchased from him by James V., and erected into a burgh royal, confirmed by James VI. in 1587, and renewed by Charles I. in 1632.

The Established church, bearing the date 1592 over its entrance, is probably the oldest building in the town. In style it is after the model of the North Church, Amsterdam, the Dutch having a great deal of intercourse with Burntisland at that date. The galleries, which show very antique carving, was erected in 1613, and it was within these walls that James VI. met the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and pressed his pet proposal for a new translation of the Scriptures, a proposal which took practical shape after that monarch's accession to the throne of England, and resulted in an authorised version. The reason Burntisland acquired this historical distinction was because the Forth was so stormy at the time that the king could not cross it to attend the Assembly in Edinburgh, and the Assembly compliently crossed to Burntisland to meet the king. An Episcopal school, founded by the late Rev. G. H. Forbes, continues to be conducted by his trustees; and the Episcopal congregation are now accommodated in a new iron church of a neat Gothic design, at Ferguson place, under the charge of the Rev. Donald Mackenzie, B.D. Acreage of the parish, 2,565. Population in 1881, 4,821.

CRAIL AND KINGSBARNS.

CRAIL is a parish, a royal burgh, and a seaport—the latter 26 miles N.E. from Kirkcaldy, and 10 S.E. from St. Andrews. It is bounded on the north by Denino and Kingsbarns, on the east by the German Ocean, and on the west by Carnbee and Kilrenny. It was anciently called Caryle or Cair-raile, and is mentioned by old historians as a town of considerable note so early as the middle of the ninth century. Its importance in latter days has, however, greatly declined, notwithstanding it possesses great capabilities as a port, and with the exception of crab fishing, for which it is famous, it enjoys but very little trade. This, in some measure, may be ascribed to the inconvenience of its harbour—for it is otherwise eligibly situated. Its principal exports consist of grain and potatoes; the imports are chiefly coals. The town consists of two streets and two or three lanes. Of the former, one is broad and spacious, containing some good houses, several of which are of that massive and antique description which indicate past wealth. A little to the east of the harbour are the fragments of a castle, or palace, once the residence of David I., the remains of which consist chiefly of a wall, now partly enclosed in a garden. Crail was erected into a royal burgh by Robert Bruce, and it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors, in conjunction with St. Andrews, Cupar-Fife, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny, and Pittenweem, it returns one member to Parliament. The parish church, Free church, and United Presbyterian church are the places of worship. The parish church was anciently a collegiate church, and is the same that was preached in by John Knox, when he roused the people to go with him to Anstruther, and then to St. Andrews. The celebrated James Sharp, Archbishop of St. Andrews, was once minister of the church, and his handwriting is still to be seen in the session records. There are public schools, one for infants, and one private school in the parish. Acreage of the parish, 6,383. Population in 1881, 1,740, of which the town contained 1,148.

KINGSBARNS is a parish containing the village of its own name, situated in the eastern part of the county, bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Crail, on the east by the German Ocean, and on the west by St. Leonard's and Crail. Its length is about three miles and a half, and its greatest breadth two miles and a half. Originally it formed part of Crail, but was separated from that parish in 1631. The village lies a mile to the south, on the public road round the coast, 6½ miles S.E. from St. Andrews, and 8½ N. from Crail. Pitmilly, a very ancient seat, stands in the northern part of the parish. Cambo, the seat of the former Earls of Kellie, now of Sir Thomas Erskine, is in the south portion of the parish. Acreage, 1,074. Population in 1881, 705.

CUPAR-FIFE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CERES, CREICH, KEMBACK, DAIRSIE, KILMANY, LOGIE, MONIMAIL, AND MOONZIE, INCLUDING THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF BOW OF FIFE, BRIGHTON, BRUNTON, EASTER FERNIE, LETHAM, LUTHRIE, RATHILLET, SPRINGFIELD, BLEBO CRAIGS, CRAIGROTHIE, AND PITSCOTTIE.

CUPAR (properly designated CUPAR-FIFE, to distinguish it from Cupar-Angus, on the borders of Perthshire), is a royal burgh, the capital of the county of Fife, 32 miles N. (by rail) from Edinburgh, 12½ S. from Dundee, 9 W. from St. Andrews, and the same distN.E. from Falkland; pleasantly situated on the left bank of the Eden, and on the line of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee branch of the North British Railway, and contains the villages of SPRINGFIELD and BRIGHTON. It is a place of considerable antiquity, but in the present day its aspect is that of a modern town, nor are there any ancient remains to be discerned in or about Cupar. Of its castle, so frequently alluded to in Scottish history, not a vestige is now visible; the Castle hill, where that fortress once stood (in which the plays of Sir David Lindsay and the "Satire of the Three Estates" were acted in 1555), is now occupied by an endowed school called the Madras Academy; and the spot which once resounded with the clangour of arms is now devoted to learning. The principal streets of the town are the Crossgate, the Bonnygate, and St. Catherine street, which last is built on the plan of the houses in the new town of Edinburgh; in this street are the County Buildings and two hotels. Opposite the County Buildings is an Episcopal church, in the Grecian style; its site is clearly that of a convent of Dominican or Black Friars, in old records described as being situated to the east end of the town. The streets and shops are lighted with gas, supplied by a company established in 1830. On the south side of the river is the old prison, said to resemble the old gaol at Glasgow; it is now used as stores and depot for the Fife Militia Artillery, a more commodious edifice having been erected for a gaol on rising ground, a little to the north of the Dundee road, but which is now closed. A fine building in Crossgate, called the Duncan Institute, was founded by the late Miss Duncan, of Edengrove, for the benefit chiefly of the working classes. It consists of reading room, library, museum, and lecture hall, and is managed by trustees appointed by that lady. The principal trade of Cupar arises from the linen manufacture but there are also other branches, as those of brewing, tanning, coachbuilding, &c., and of all the various necessary and domestic avocations a due proportion. There are five branch banks —one of the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, together with a bank for savings. Four newspapers are published in Cupar, weekly, namely—the Fife Herald, Wednesday; the Fife News, Friday; the Fifeshire Journal, Thursday; and the People's Journal, Saturday. As a royal burgh, Cupar is governed by a provost, three bailies, and a dean of guild, with a treasurer and eighteen councillors. Being the county town and head burgh of the shire, the public business relating to both is transacted at Cupar; and here, consequently, reside a considerable number of practitioners before the courts of the shire. The ordinary sheriff court and the sheriff small debts court are held every Thursday during session.

The places of worship are the parish church and a chapel in connection therewith, and others for the Free Church, United Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Baptist, and Roman Catholic congregations. The schools of Cupar are of the best class, and are supplied with able teachers in all the useful branches of education; and a public library well stocked with books in the various branches of literature and science evidences the polished taste of the inhabitants. The parish of Cupar contains 5,736 acres. The weekly market for corn is held on Tuesday, and a cattle market on Tuesday once a month. The parish in 1881 had a population of 7,404, the town of Cupar at the same period having 5,010.

CERES, or Cyrus, is a parish and village—the former situated on an acclivity nearly 3 miles S.E. from Cupar-Fife. The parish is 8 miles long and from 1 to 4 in breadth, with 10,075 acres; the surface is hilly, but in general subject to agriculture. On the north it is bounded by Cupar parish, on the east is Cameron, on the south Largo, and on the west Cults. Weaving linen fabrics employs some of the inhabitants of the parish. The old house of Stotstarvet, once the family residence of the Scots, one of whom wrote a remarkable little work, entitled, "The Staggering State of the Scots' Statesman," is within the parish, and occupies a conspicuous situation on the top of the high grounds, which abound the house of Fife on the east. The house contains a museum of antiquities and curiosities. The parish church, which stands on an elevated situation, has a castellated square tower, which is seen at a considerable distance. There is a United Presbyterian and a Free church in the village. There are three public schools, viz., at Craigrothie, Bridgend and Ceres. Fairs are held on 24th of June and 20th of October. The nearest railway station is at Cupar. In 1881 the parish of Ceres contained a population of 2,063.

CREICH parish, situate five miles N.W. from Cupar (which is its post town), is about three miles in length and two in breadth, and embraces 2,341 acres; it is bounded on the north by Flisk, on the south by Moonzie and Monimail, on the east by Balmerino and Kilmany, and on the west by Abdie and Dunbog. Its surface is undulating, and the soil sandy and thin. There is a handsome parish church and school, also a Free church and school. On a little eminence near the church are the vestiges of a Roman camp, and at a short distance therefrom are the remains of a castle which formerly belonged to Cardinal Beaton. The parish was the birthplace of the Rev. John Sage, the first of the post-revolution bishops in the Scottish Episcopal communion, and the author of that very remarkable production, the "Fundamental Charter of Presbytery." The nearest railway station is at Cupar. Population in 1881, 886.

DAIRSIE is a parish and village—the latter, a small one, is situated on the main road from Cupar to Dundee two and a half miles N.E. from the former and eight S. from the latter town; bounded on the north by Logie and Kilmany, on the south by Kemback, on the east by Leuchars, and on the west by Cupar, its post town. The river Eden, which intersects the parish, is crossed by a good bridge of three arches, the erection of Archbishop Spotteswood, who was the proprietor of the Dairsie estate. The church, which is in the Saxon style of architecture, and surmounted by a neat spire, was erected at the commencement of the seventeenth century. Dairsie Castle, now a ruin, is noted as the place where a parliament was called upon to assemble in the year 1335. The parish is nearly three miles in extent each way, and contains 2,555 acres; with little exception, the whole is fine arable land. There is a public school here. It is a station on the North British Railway. Population in 1881, 693.

KEMBACK parish is nearly of a triangular figure, with its broadest side to the Eden, and measures about three and a half miles in breadth and length; it is three miles E. from Cupar, its post town, and two and a half S. from Ceres. It is bounded on the north by Dairsie and Leuchars, on the east by St. Andrews and Ceres, on the south by Ceres, and on the west by Ceres and Cupar. It is one of the richest agricultural and most beautiful districts in the country; out of 2,594 acres more than 1,500 are fine arable land, and there are many fine plantations in different parts of the parish. Besides the Eden it is watered by the Ceres stream. There is a flax spinning mill in this parish. The church stands about two miles from Ceres village, and three from Cupar. There is also a public school. The nearest railway station is at Dairsie. Population in 1881, 853.

KILMANY is a parish and village, situated about 5 miles N. from Cupar, its post town. It is bounded on the north by Balmerino and Forgan, on the south by Logie and Cupar, on the east by Forgan, and on the west by Moonzie and Creich. The parish is irregular; its length being about 6 miles, and its breadth varying from 3 miles to 1, and embraces 5,343 acres. With the exception of a few acres, which are chiefly woodland, the entire parish is in a high state of cultivation, being well watered and drained by means of numerous waterfalls and streams. There is a parish church and two public schools, also an United Presbyterian church at Rathillet. The nearest railway station is at Cupar. Population in 1881, 634.

LOGIE is a small parish, situated 6 miles N. from Cupar, its post town, bounded on the north by Forgan, on the south by Dairsie, on the east by Leuchars, and on the west by Kilmany. Its length is 4 miles, and its breadth about 1½, embracing 3,599 acres. The soil is of a rich fertile nature. There are a parish church, a Free church and a public school. The nearest railway station is at Dairsie. Population in 1881, 390.

MONIMAIL is a parish and village, situated about 5 miles W. from Cupar. It is bounded on the north by Dunbog, Creich, and Moonzie, on the south by Cults and Collessie, on the east by Cupar, and on the west by Abdie; its length is 6 miles and its breadth 4, and it embraces 6,554 acres. The name of the parish is supposed to be derived from the Celtic word Mon or Monath, a hill—the latter part signifying a mile or meal, or meille, a mid. The northern parts consist of a fine range of hills, the highest of which is called Mount Hill. A monumental pillar to the late Earl of Hopetoun stands upon its summit. It is a plain Doric column, 92 feet in height, surmounted by a square capital of 15 feet. It is hollow within, and has a narrow spiral staircase by which there is an ascent to the top, whence a fine view of the valley of the Eden and the Firths of Forth and Tay is obtained. Fernie Castle is a place of great antiquity, and is supposed to have been one of Macduff's castles; it has evidently been a place of considerable strength. The greater portion of the parish is in a high state of cultivation, the remainder being pasture and woodland. The parish church is at Monimail; it is a handsome building, and contains nearly 600 sittings. There is also a Free church at the Bow of Fife, and two public schools in the parish. Population in 1881, 834.

MOONZIE is a small parish about 3 miles W. of Cupar, bounded on the north by Kilmany, on the south by Monimail, on the east by Cupar (its post town), and on the west by Creich. It is the smallest parish in the county, being only 2 miles long by 1¼ broad, and contains 1,258 acres. The soil is excellent, and in a high state of cultivation. There is a parish church and school. The inhabitants are mainly connected with agriculture. The nearest railway station is Cupar. Population 1881, 148.

BLEBO CRAIGS is a hamlet in the parish of Kemback. Dairsie is the nearest railway station.

BOW OF FIFE is a hamlet in the parish of Monimail. Springfield is the nearest railway station.

BRUNTON is a village in the parish of Creich. Cupar is the nearest railway station.

CRAIGROTHIE is a small village in the parish of Ceres. Cupar is the nearest railway station.

EASTER FERNIE is a hamlet in the parish of Monimail. Cupar is the nearest railway station.

LETHAM is a village in the parish of Monimail. The nearest railway station is at Collessie.

LUTHRIE is a village in the parish of Creich. Cupar is the nearest railway station.

PITSCOTTIE is a hamlet partly in the parish of Kemback, and partly in that of Ceres. The nearest railway station is at Cupar.

RATHILLET is a village in the parish of Kilmany. The nearest railway station is at Cupar.

SPRINGFIELD is a village and railway station in the parish of Cupar.

DUNFERMLINE,

WITH THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF CROSSFORD, HALBEATH, TOWNHILL, WELLWOOD, MILES MARK, CROSSGATES, KINGSEAT, AND LASSODIE.

DUNFERMLINE is a city and a royal burgh, and the seat of a presbytery, the capital of its parish, the chief town in the western part of Fife, and one of the most important in the scale of manufactures in the county. Its ancient title of city is now revived. It is 16 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 47 N.E. from Glasgow, 31 S.S.W. from Cupar, 14 miles from Alloa, 21 from Stirling, 15 from Kirkcaldy, and 6 from North Queensferry; situate on rising ground, three miles north from the Firth of Forth, and three hundred feet above the level at Limekilns, the nearest part of the coast. Thus elevated, it commands a prospect remarkably various and beautiful, extending over fourteen different counties, and comprises a fine marine view on the south, and its salubrious situation renders it one of the healthiest cities in Scotland. In 1057 Malcolm Canmore ascended the Scottish throne. Besides founding the monastery of Dunfermline, he built a strong tower on a height in the adjacent glen, and from this tower the town derives its name and dates its existence. Dun in Gaelic signifies a hill or fort; fiar means crooked or winding; and lyn a pool and running water, which is exactly descriptive of the tower and locality. The arms of the town are a tower, supported by two lions, with the motto, "Esto Rupes inaccesso"—"Be thou an invincible rock." A palace was afterwards erected not far from the tower, in a most romantic situation; the south-west wall still remains, a monument of the magnificence of the fabric of which it formed a part. For a long period a case was pending in the law courts between the Crown and the proprietor of the Pittencrieff lands as to the ground occupied by the palace ruins. In 1873 the dispute terminated in a decision of the House of Lords by which the ruins and a portion of the grounds adjoining were apportioned to the Crown. Lately the ground has been duly boarded off, and the right of admission to it by the public is granted, while the Government for the time being allowed a sum to be inserted in the estimates for the repair of these interesting and historical ruins. The monastery, one of the most ancient in Scotland, was founded by Malcolm Canmore, as before mentioned, for monks of the Benedictine order, and was completed by his son, Alexander I. It continued to be governed by a prior till the reign of David I., who raised it to the dignity of an abbey, and in 1124 translated thither thirteen monks from Canterbury. The abbey was richly endowed, and derived its revenues from very distant parts of the kingdom; it was an imposing and extensive building, but fell a sacrifice to the plundering army of Edward I. on his insidious intervention in the affairs of Scotland. About the commencement of the sixteenth century, all that survived of this venerable pile was the church, with a few cells for the monks; these were demolished at the Reformation.

The city consists of streets stretching from east to west, with a number of smaller streets crossing down hill at right angles, or proceeding in a northerly direction. The houses along the leading thoroughfares are nearly all well built; surveying the spires and other eminent points in an external view of the place, it presents the contour of a venerable city. Within the last fifty years its size has been greatly increased, not only by the extension of the cross streets but by the addition of a large suburb to the west and east, and during the last thirty years and more recently, the improvements effected have been considerable. There is a station here on the Dunfermline branch of the northern section of the North British Railway, which affords direct communication with all parts of the country; whilst another line, about three miles in length, hence to Charlestown, is used principally in the conveyance of coal for shipment at that port. The west of Fife mineral railway runs from the town north into the rich mineral district, which contains immense quantities of coal, ironstone, limestone, &c. A line has been constructed between Dunfermline and Edinburgh by North Queensferry which enables passengers to travel to and from Edinburgh in about one-third of the time as formerly. It was constructed by a local company at a cost of £90,000, but is now a branch of the North British Railway Company. The station is at Comely Park. At North Queensferry there is a pier 400 yards in length, and composed of massive concrete blocks, by which the traffic of the line can be continued without interruption at all stages of the tide. A high level bridge is now in course of erection for carrying the railway over the Firth of Forth, and thus forming a through communication between Edinburgh, Perth, Dundee and the north. There is a spacious public park, situate at the east end of the town, extending to between 30 and 40 acres, which is finely laid out with trees, and has a water fountain; the plan or design was prepared by the late Sir Joseph Paxton. It commands a fine view of Edinburgh on a clear day, as well as of the Firth of Forth for a great distance. The town is well supplied with water. The reservoirs at Craigluscar proving insufficient for the requirements of the town, the corporation obtained an Act of Parliament in 1876 to ensure a more plentiful supply from Glensherrup, the works costing about £70,000. The streets are lighted with gas. There is a strong fire brigade in the city, who have quarters in Campbell street. Fire plugs on the gravitation principle are placed in numerous places throughout the streets and lanes. The sewage of the city is conveyed by means of pipes to the sea, the pipe tract beginning at Urquhart Farm and touching the coast at Charlestown, a distance of three miles. The plans were prepared by Mr. J. L. Stewart, C.E., Edinburgh, and the cost of the undertaking was about £7,000.

The most imposing public building is the Town House, at the bottom of High street. This handsome structure was begun in 1875 and finished in 1879, at a cost of about £20,000. It is built on the site of the old Town House, and by its erection, Kirkgate, which was the narrowest and most dangerous thoroughfare in the town, has been greatly widened. The building, which presents a combination of the French and Scotch Gothic styles of architecture, is from a design by Mr. J. C. Walker, Edinburgh, and has two frontages, the one to Bridge street 66ft., and the other to Kirkgate 144ft. in length. At the north-east corner, and joining the two frontages, is the chief feature of the building—viz., a tower, which measures 23ft. square, and rises to an altitude of 150ft. There is a clock fixed in the tower, at an elevation of 105ft., with four illuminated dials, striking the hours on a powerfully-toned bell, weighing 33 cwt. The keystone of the main entrance represents a dragon, the emblem of St. Margaret, and above this, on the east front of the tower, is an elaborate carving of the royal Scottish arms. On the Bridge street elevation is another carving of the burgh arms, also canopied busts representing Malcolm Canmore and Queen Margaret, with King Robert the Bruce and Elizabeth, his second queen, all of which royal personages are buried in the abbey. In the Kirkgate front are placed the eight carved stone panels from the old Town House—viz., the royal arms, the burgh arms, St. Margaret enshrined, the English rose, the Scotch thistle, the Irish harp, the French fleur-de-lys, and the sword and septre. Some of these are said to be from the old market cross of 1620. Other carved figures of a fanciful and grotesque character adorn the building, most of which, however, come more under the general designation of nondescript. The interior of the building includes a burgh court room and a council chamber, accommodation being also provided for the Town Clerk and other officials of the burgh. Perhaps the public buildings next in prominence to the Town House if we except the edifices for religious purposes, are the County buildings, standing on the south side of the High street, and constructed in the Grecian style, with a spire 132ft. in height rising over the front. They contain a sheriff court room, justice of peace court room, and a suite of rooms for the sheriff, sheriff's clerk's office, procurator fiscal's, and other county business. Within this building is the post office. By a gift of £5,000 generously offered by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, of New York, a native of Dunfermline, the Carnegie Public Baths were founded in 1875. They are very commodious, and the building, which is situated in Bath street is from a neat and elegant design prepared by Mr. Andrew Scobie, Dunfermline. The above gift was followed by another munificent donation of £8,000 by the same gentlemen, for the erection of a free library. The building is at the corner of St. Margaret and Abbot streets, and is named the Carnegie Free Library. The style of architecture may be designated domestic Tudor, and is from plans prepared by Mr. J. C. Walker, Edinburgh. The tympanum of the doorway contains a bas-relief of the sun in splendour, with the inscription "Let there be Light." The interior arrangements have been well planned, and consist of library room, reading rooms for ladies and gentlemen, recreation and smoke rooms, lavatories, and dwelling house for librarian. The memorial stone was laid July 27th, 1881, and was opened by the Earl of Rosebery August 29th, 1883. The library contains over 13,000 volumes. Altogether the design exhibits much skill and taste, and is an important acquisition to the town in an architectural as well as an intellectual point of view. In St. Margaret street, and on the site immediately south of he Carnegie Free Library, is St. Margaret's Hall. This building was begun in 1876, and completed in 1878, at a cost of about £12,000. from plans prepared by Mr. Scarforth, Edinburgh. The style of architecture is an adaptation of early English. The building contains a large hall capable of seating 1,500 persons, in which theatrical representations are occasionally given; a lecture hall capable of seating 350 persons, billiard rooms, a reading room, and several committee and board rooms. In the large hall there is a splendid organ, which was purchased and presented to the directors of the Hall Company by the ladies of the town and district, the money being raised at a bazaar held in the building in April, 1878. The instrument cost over £1,300, and derives its blowing power from an ingenious hydraulic engine. The building belongs to the St. Margaret's Hall Company, Limited. The music hall, in Guildhall street, is a large modern erection, used for all kinds of public meetings. The upper hall is a room of 90 feet in length, 50 feet in width, and 45 feet in height. The other public buildings comprise the prison, the poorhouse, and hospital, all of which occupy sites at the eastern extremity of the town.

The burgh of Dunfermline, it appears, was held of the monastery, which formerly possessed paramount jurisdiction and exclusive privileges here for nearly two centuries, and became royal by a charter from James VI. dated 24th May, 1588. In this document the monarch ratifies sundry charters, donations, and indentures, by John and Robert, abbots of Dunfermline, particularly one dated the 10th of October, 1395, by which the abbot and convent renounce in favour of the aldermen and community, the whole income of the burgh belonging to their revenue, with the small customs, profits of courts, &c., "reserving, however, the power of punishment, should any of the magistrates be guilty of injustice in the exercise of their office." In 1724 the burgh was placed on the footing it still maintains as respects its government, which is vested in a provost, four bailies, and a dean of guild, together with a treasurer, a chamberlain, a town clerk, and fifteen councillors, elected pursuant to the terms of the Municipal Reform Act. The burgh joins with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross, and Queensferry (called the Stirling burghs), in sending one member to Parliament, the Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman being the present representative. Dunfermline is constituted the seat of the sheriff substitute for the western district of Fife, who holds a regular court on the first and third Tuesday of every month during session, when there is always a considerable amount of business to be done in the way of civil actions. Burgh courts are held daily in the Corporation buildings. There are two newspapers, namely, the Dunfermline Press and the Dunfermline Journal, both published on Saturday.

The constantly increasing population and prosperity of Dunfermline may be entirely ascribed to its manufacture of table linens and damask goods. This branch of industry took its root in the town about the commencement of last century. The cloth is woven of all dimensions, of the most elegant patterns, and to a greater extent than in any other town in Great Britain, many firms being engaged in this business. There are several large factories where power-loom weaving is carried on. It is said that the chest of the Incorporation of Weavers contains two curious specimens of their art; a man's shirt wrought in the loom by a weaver of the name of Inglis, and a woman's shift by another named Meldrum, both of which are without seam, and effected without the assistance of the needle; the only part which Inglis could not accomplish was a button for the neck. Exclusive of the linen trade, there are other branches of magnitude and importance, among which may be mentioned the large fire-clay works of Messrs. J. & M. Craig, at Lilliehill; Richard Street and Sons, at Townhill; Loch-Head Fire Clay Co., Loch-Head; and Mr. Ord Adams, at Crossgates, where every description of articles usually made from that material is manufactured. There are also iron and brass foundries, engineering works, dye works and tobacco manufactories. The coal trade in the neighbourhood is also very extensive, and large quantities of this article are annually exported. About 4,000 men are employed, and the condition of the collier has been much improved recently. Six branch banks of the first respectability are established here, in addition to a branch of the National Security Savings Bank, for which a fine building has been erected in East Port street, at a cost of £3,000. The board of directors include the Provost, bailies, and clergymen of the town. The principal hotels are the City Arms, in Bridge st; the Royal, in High street; and the St. Margaret's, in St. Margaret street; besides several other houses for public accommodation of lesser note. In the town are bible, tract, missionary, and other religious societies, horticultural societies, and various charitable associations.

The parish church has been collegiate and under the care of two ministers since 1645. Of the other places of worship, their situations, and the respective officiating clergymen, will be found under a list in a distinctive head in a succeeding page. The Secession church (now the United Presbyterian) which has extended over the greater part of Great Britain, became conspicuous here at an early period of its history, the Rev. Ralph Erskine, one of the parochial clergymen of Dunfermline, being one of the four ministers who first seceded from the Establishment in 1733, and shortly after founded Queen Anne street church here, which, it is believed, was the first or second of that denomination. The most elegant building here of modern erection is the Abbey church. It is of ornamental Gothic architecture, surmounted by a massive tower one hundred feet high, having the words "King Robert the Bruce" in massive stone letters four feet high round the four sides at the summit of the tower. The interior of the church is much admired. While excavating the foundation, the workmen discovered the tomb of that celebrated monarch, 490 years after his death; his remains were collected and enclosed in a leaden coffin, and are interred under the tower. Adjoining the new is part of the old abbey church, where many other Scottish monarchs and nobles lie buried. Amongst other gifts to the town, Mr. Andrew Carnegie also caused to be placed in the abbey a handsome memorial window, from the design of Sir Noel Paton, the ceremony of unveiling which was performed in June, 1884. The town and neighbourhood support many friendly societies. The grammar school was instituted towards the end of the fifteenth century. In 1873 the school was, by the operation of "The Education (Scotland) Act, 1872," transferred to and placed under the management of the burgh School Board, the interest of the original sum of £2,000, which belonged to the school being made over annually to that body. In 1877 the Board, with the approval of the Board of Education, resolved to exclude elementary instruction from the curriculum, and to elevate the school into one for an efficient aid to higher or secondary education. The building formerly occupied in Queen Anne street proving unsuitable for teaching purposes, a spacious and handsome edifice, with every modern improvement, was erected in Buchanan street at a cost of £7,500, and the school was transferred to the new building in January, 1886. The Board have also erected a school in the west end of the town, at a cost of £4,136. Since then a central school has been substituted for the Rolland and Commercial schools, at a cost of £5,143, and a school which was erected in connection with St. Leonard's steam power weaving factory, purchased at a cost of £1,200. Altogether there are seven schools under the control of the Board, while a supervision is exercised over three other educational institutions. The market is held on Tuesday for grain, which is disposed of by stock and sample. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in January, March, April, June, July, September, October and November. The entire parish of Dunfermline comprises 20,764 statute acres, and by the returns made to Government in 1871 contained a population of 23,313, of which 14,963 were returned for the burgh. In 1881 the number of inhabitants in the burgh had increased to 17,085.

Crossford, Halbeath, Townhill, Wellwood, Kingseat, and Miles Mark are small villages and hamlets in the parish, from one to three miles distant from Dunfermline. At Halbeath are the colliery and offices of Mr. Andrew Wallace, and a Board school. At Townhill are the collieries and offices of the Townhill Coal Company, and a Board school. At Wellwood are the collieries and offices of Messrs. Thomas Spowart and Co. Limited, and a school. At Miles Mark a school has been built by the joint aid of the parish and burgh School Boards, at a cost of £3,000; it will accommodate 400 children. Population in 1881: Halbeath, 918; Townhill, 1,862; Wellwood, 617; Kingseat, 724; and Miles Park and Park Nook, 439.

Crossgates is a village partly in the parish of Dalgetty and partly in that of and four miles from Dunfermline, four miles north from Inverkeithing, situated about a quarter of a mile from a station on the North British Railway. The inhabitants are principally employed in the collieries surrounding the village. The places of worship are an established, and United Presbyterian churches, also a Board school. Population in 1881, 1,057.

Lassodie is a colliery village in the parish of Beath, 4¼ miles distant from Dunfermline, its post town. A Free church and a public school are the principal buildings here. Population in 1881, 808.

DYSART

IS a town and parish, and a royal and parliamentary burgh, and a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British Railway, bounded on the north by Kinglassie, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Wemyss and Markinch, and on the west by Kirkcaldy. Its length is about 3 miles and its breadth 2 miles, and it embraces 4,197 acres. The town is situated 2 miles N.W. from Kirkcaldy, on a gentle declivity towards the Firth of Forth. The central street contains many substantial houses, but of very antique appearance. The streets are gas-lighted by a company formed in 1843, and during the last few years have been much improved and repaired. So early as 1546 Dysart is mentioned as one of the principal trading towns on the coast of Fife, and was much noted for the manufacture and export of salt. The alteration in commerce, consequent on the Union of 1707, destroyed the ancient legitimate trade, which was succeeded by smuggling; and this contraband traffic, in its turn, has also been annihilated. The trade it now enjoys is considerable, and consists in the weaving of ticks, checks, and similar linen fabrics, also woollens, tweeds, druggets, and wincyes. There are large power-loom factories in the burgh, besides two flax spinning mills, and in the vicinity are mines of coal, extensively wrought. The harbour is good, and there is an excellent wet dock, with about eighteen feet of water, sufficient to accommodate about twenty vessels of different burthen, and there is also a patent slip capable of taking up vessels of 400 tons burthen, the only one on this part of the coast. Coal is the principal export. Dysart was created a royal burgh in the beginning of the sixteenth century, but the original charter is lost. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, and six councillors—in all nine; and joins with Kirkcaldy, Kinghorn, and Burntisland, in returning one member to Parliament. The Normand Memorial Hall, a very handsome stone structure, was erected at a cost of between £5,000 and £6,000, and presented to the town by Mrs. James Normand, in memory of her deceased husband.

The places of worship are the Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, and in the town are also parochial, industrial, and infants' schools, and a Mechanics' Institute. The most remarkable object of antiquity near the town is the castle of Ravenscraig, standing on a steep crag fronting the sea; this castle is alluded to in Sir Walter Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," under the name of Ravensheugh. It was inhabited in Oliver Cromwell's time, and was assaulted by a party of his troops. It has for many years been deserted, and time has reduced it to a ruinous state. Dysart gives the title of earl to a branch of the Murrays of Tullibardine. Dysart House, the seat of the Earl of Rosslyn, is situated in the midst of extensive and beautifully laid out grounds. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 11,601 persons, of whom 10,877 were in the parliamentary beyond royal burgh.

FALKLAND AND FREUCHIE.

FALKLAND, a parish, and small ancient town of its name, a royal burgh, is 25 miles N. from Edinburgh, 23 miles S. from Dundee, 15 S.E. from Perth, the same distance N.N.W. from Kinghorn, 10 S.W. from Cupar, 3 S. from Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo, and the same distance from the Falkland Road station of the North British railway. It is bounded on the north by Auchtermuchty, on the south by Markinch, on the east by Kettle, and on the west by Strathmiglo; its length is about six miles and its breadth about four, and is situated nearly in the centre of the county, on the north side of the Lomond hills, which shelter it completely from the winds of the south. Falkland consists principally of one street, the eastern part of which is broad and spacious, but towards the west is narrow and inconvenient. The few good houses in the town are of an antique character, somewhat in keeping with the architecture of the palace, a building well worthy the notice of a stranger. For a long time it was only a ruin, but was rescued from total decay and repaired by the late Mr. Bruce, of Nethill. The excellence of the workmanship still delights the eye of the antiquarian, and gives an idea of what the building once was. The royal family of Scotland resided here occasionally up to the time of Charles II., who called here on his return from the continent in 1650. James V. died here in 1542. A dungeon is shown in which it is said the Duke of Rothesay was starved to death by his uncle Albany. Tradition reports that this victim of oppression was supported for a length of time by two females, the wives of tradesmen of Falkland, one of whom supplied bread to him through a chink in the walls of the prison, while the other conveyed the milk from her breast by means of an oaten reed; being at length discovered, these supplies were cut off, and he perished of hunger. In 1615, it is said, the famous Rob Roy garrisoned the palace with a party of Macgregors, and laid the country under heavy contributions for miles round, until at length he retired with great booty. The town was erected into a burgh by James II. in 1458, and its charter was confirmed and renewed by James VI. in 1595, in order (in the words of the charter) to "obviate the damage and inconveniences sustained, for want of innkeepers and victuallers, by the many prelates, peers, barons, nobles, and others of their subjects who come to their country seats." The magistracy consists of a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, a town clerk, and nine councillors. A town hall was erected in 1804, in which balls and other public assemblages take place. A large common, which belongs to Falkland, and on which the inhabitants had a right to turn their cattle, &c. was some years ago divided among the heritors, and is nearly all enclosed. The House of Falkland, erected by the late Mr. Bruce, is one of the finest mansions in the county; the grounds are very tastefully laid out, and are annually resorted to by large numbers of visitors, who find it a very excellent place for picnics, &c. The house and estates are now the property of the Marquis of Bute. The manufacture of linen forms an important branch of trade here, and the chief occupation of the industrious class is weaving. The Lomond hills in this district are shaped like a cone, the eastern Lomond, which is the most regular and beautiful, is about 1,650 feet above the level of the sea, and appears to have been fortified. The western Lomond is higher, and hason its top a large cairn, or heap of loose stones.

The places of worship are a parish church, a Free church, and a chapel for Independents. The parish church was erected some years ago, through the liberality of the late O. T. Bruce, Esq., at an expense, it is said, of £7,000. It is a fine structure, surmounted by an elegant spire; and to perpetuate the memory of this gentleman a monument has been erected on Nott Hill, near the Lomonds, and can be seen at a great distance. A very neat fountain was likewise constructed in the centre of the town by the above gentleman, who did much to contribute to the welfare and improvement of this place. A very handsome memorial has been erected in the square behind the palace by the executors of the late Mrs. Bruce, to the memory of her father, Colonel Robert Bruce, and her uncle, John Bruce, from whom she inherited the estates of Nethill, Falkland Wood, and Grangehill, near Kinghorn. The parish school has been very considerably enlarged and improved by the School Board since the passing of the act. Fairs were formerly held in the parish on the second Tuesday in January, third Thursday in March, second Monday in May, third Friday in June, first Thursday in August, last Tuesday in September, and Friday before Edinburgh Hallow fair in November; but since railways became general through the country, these fairs have fallen into disuse. The parish of Falkland embraces 8,265 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 2,698 persons, of whom 972 were in the royal burgh.

NEWTON OF FALKLAND is a hamlet about midway between Falkland and Freuchie, where there is an extensive trade carried on in brewing.

FREUCHIE is a village, in the parish of and about two miles E. from Falkland. The manufacture of linen is carried on here to a considerable extent, the inhabitants being principally employed in weaving linen goods. A United Presbyterian and a quoad sacra church are in the village. There is also a public school. Population in 1881, 1,059.

INVERKEITHING,

WITH THE PARISH OF DALGETTY, AND THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF NORTH QUEENSFERRY, ST. DAVID'S, FORDELL, HILLEND, JAMES TOWN, AND ROSYTH.

INVERKEITHING is a royal burgh, a seaport, and the capital of its parish; 11 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 30 S. from Perth, 18 S.W. from Kirkcaldy, and 4 S.E. from Dunfermline. It is most agreeably situated at the inner side of a bay of the Firth of Forth, on an acclivity springing from the margin of the bay, and about 2 miles from North Queensferry, on the great road from Edinburgh to Perth, Aberdeen, &c., and on a railway from Edinburgh to Dunfermline, via Queensferry. Its site commands an extensive view of the south bank of the Forth, with all that is grand and picturesque in the scenery of Mid-Lothian; Edinburgh, with its magnificently seated castle and fine buildings, lofty spires and towering monuments, bounds the eastern prospect, which is truly majestic when the morning sun beams on Arthur's Seat or Salisbury Craigs, while the passing and re-passing of vessels on the river, and others lying at anchor or moored in the harbour, add greatly to the beauty of the survey. So early as the days of David I., Inverkeithing was a royal residence, and received a charter of confirmation in the reign of William the Lion. There are many remains of antiquity, some of which are co-eval with the earliest periods of Scottish history. The old castle of Rosyth, the celebrated residence of Margaret, spouse of Malcolm Canmore, and subsequently of the Stuart family, still resists the fury of the storm, and rears its venerable head amidst the waters of the Forth. The rock on which it stands is connected with the mainland by a causeway, and a stone slab, placed in the wall over what appears to have been the principal entrance, bears the date of 1561. In Sir Walter Scott's novel of "The Abbot," this castle is alluded to, and tradition points it out as being the birthplace of the wife of Oliver Cromwell. It is now the property of the Earl of Hopetoun, whose noble mansion stands on the opposite shore, each gaining by the contrast—the one preserved in stately magnificence, and the other a mighty skeleton. The town consists chiefly of two streets, which are lighted by gas; improvements generally have been made, and the thoroughfares display some excellent and well furnished shops. There is a town house, which comprises a gaol and suitable apartments for the courts. The first existing charter of Inverkeithing is one from William the Lion, confirming charters of earlier but unknown dates; a number of intervening charters were confirmed by one from James VI., in 1598. The government is vested in a provost, or sheriff, two bailies, a dean of guild and a treasurer, elected by the councillors. The expense of paving, lighting and cleansing is defrayed from the Corporation funds. The burgh, in conjunction with Dunfermline, Stirling, Culross and South Queensferry, sends one member to the Imperial Parliament. Besides the usual trades found in a respectable country town, there are fire-clay works, salt works, tanning, rope making and shipbuilding; connected with the latter branch is a patent slip, of great use in repairing vessels. Freestone and whinstone are abundant in this neighbourhood, and of excellent quality, and considerable quantities of each are annually exported. The harbour is capacious, and the bay is noted as a place of security in all winds. The private harbour of East Ness affords additional accommodation, and gives about 18 feet of water at spring tides. A branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, is established at Inverkeithing, affording great convenience to the monetary transactions of the commercial inhabitants. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and one for a United Presbyterian congregation. There is a large public school under the School Board, in which the languages, mathematics, and the usual branches of education are taught. A fair is held on the first Friday in August. The entire parish of Inverkeithing, the area of which is 4,482 acres, contained in 1881 a population of 2,565; of this number the town had 1,653.

HILLEND, JAMES TOWN and ROSYTH are hamlets in the parish of Inverkeithing. At the latter place are the ruins of Rosyth Castle. A Board school for Dalgetty is situated at the eastern part of Hillend.

NORTH QUEENSFERRY, formerly in the parish of Inverkeithing, but now annexed to Dunfermline, is 2 miles S. from Inverkeithing, and is well known to travellers as the port and point of land opposite to Queensferry (or South Queensferry), in Linlithgowshire, and a steamer passes between the two several times daily. At this place a high level bridge, under which ships can sail, is now (1889) in course of erection, for carrying the North British railway over the Firth of Forth. When completed, it will exceed in grandeur anything as yet attempted by the engineer. Two of the spans of this gigantic undertaking will be 1,700 feet each in length, and have a height of 150 feet above high water at spring tides. There will be two other spans of 675 feet, fourteen of 168 feet, and six of 50 feet each. The total length with the viaduct approaches, will be a mile and a half. This magnificent structure, designed by Messrs. Fowler & Baker, will, it is said, eclipse the largest bridge ever yet built. A short distance to the west of the village is the anchorage ground, resorted to by vessels in stress of weather or contrary winds, called "Saint Margaret's Hope." Here is a station of the coast-guard, and it is a fishing one for a kind of sprat, of which prodigious quantities are taken. There are large whinstone quarries, employing a number of men. Population in 1881, 360.

DALGETTY is a parish five miles in length, and from one to three and a half in breadth, and covers an area of 3,340 acres. It is bounded on the north by Dunfermline, on the east by Aberdour, on the south by the river Forth, and on the west by Inverkeithing. The surrounding district is rich in coal of which great quantities are exported from St. David's. In this parish are the ruins of Fordell Castle (erected in 1111), with its beautiful grounds and waterfall, well worthy of notice from the tourist; also Donibristle, the seat of the Earl of Moray, beautifully situated on the Firth of Forth, commanding a splendid sea view. Its park is one of the finest in Scotland. There are two public schools in the parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,277.

SAINT DAVID'S is a small port in the parish of Dalgetty, and about a mile and a half to the east of Inverkeithing. The rise of this place can be mainly ascribed to the advantages it affords for the shipment of coal, brought from the extensive collieries at Fordell by means of a private railway five miles in length. At the pier here, which has been extended at a cost of from £4,000 to £5,000, upwards of 500 tons of coal can be shipped daily; and there is an average depth of eighteen feet at high water—being greater than that of any other port on this part of the coast, admitting vessels of upwards of six hundred tons to receive their cargoes at the pier.

FORDELL is a village chiefly inhabited by miners, in the parish of Dalgetty, about a mile south-east of Crossgates, its postal district, on the property of the late George William Mercer Henderson, Esq. It has a fine reading room, which has been provided for the use of the workmen. Population in 1881, 488.

KETTLE AND LADYBANK,

WITH CULTS, COLLESSIE AND PITLESSIE.

KETTLE is a parish and village, about eight miles in length and three in breadth, and embracing 7,612 acres, the latter 17 miles S. from Dundee, 4 E. from Falkland, and about 1 S. from Ladybank, standing about a quarter of a mile off the main road from Edinburgh to Cupar, nearly six miles S.W. from the latter town. The Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British Railway passes through the village, at which there is a station. The name of Kettle is of very obscure etymology; it was anciently called Catul, or Katul, and in common phraseology it is invariably entitled "the Kettle." At one period the parish was denominated King's Kettle, from being the property of the Crown. This district forms a large portion of that rich and beautiful territory on the north side of the Howe of Fife; it is exceedingly fertile throughout, with a slight exception. The river Eden bounds the parish on nearly the whole of the northern side. The manufacture of linen is the principal trade carried on here. The church, which is a handsome building with a square tower, was erected in 1832. Besides the Established church, there is an United Presbyterian church. A large public school was erected in 1866, at a cost of about £3,000, calculated to supply all the educational wants of the parish. King's Kettle railway station is in the village. In this parish, about half a mile from the village, is the hamlet of BALMALCOLM, where there is a Free church. In 1881 the population of Kettle parish was 2,054, and that of the village 598.

CULTS is a parish two miles and a half in length and one and a half in breadth, and embraces 2,924 acres, situated about 3 miles E. from Ladybank, its post town, 2 N.E. from Kettle, and 5 S.W. from Cupar. The parish is chiefly in the Howe of Fife, on the south banks of the river Eden, having Ceres on the east, Kettle on the west, Monimail on the north, and Scoonie and Kennoway on the south. It abounds in coal, lime and freestone, and is generally well cultivated and enclosed. The principal ornaments of this district are the mansion house and beautifully disposed pleasure grounds and plantations of Crawford Priory, which is on the north side of the road to Cupar. Wilkie, the celebrated painter, was a native of the parish, his father having been minister of Cults. The ancient name of the parish was Guilkes, which signifies a nook, or corner, it being disjointed from the large strath which runs from east to west along the banks of the Eden. Population in 1881, 704.

PITLESSIE is a small village in the parish of Cults, 2 miles N.N.E. from Kettle, situated on the road between Kirkcaldy and Cupar, 4 miles S. S.W. from the latter town, and about 2 S.E. from Ladybank, its post town. The occupation of the inhabitants is of the same nature as that of those of Kettle. There is a public school here which serves for the whole of the parish. The railway stations of Kettle, Ladybank, and Collessie are each about two miles distant. Population in 1881, 356.

COLLESSIE, a Gaelic word signifying bottom of a glen, is a parish lying to the north of that of Kettle, 4 miles N.N.W. therefrom, and 3 N.N.W. from Ladybank, its post town. It is eight miles in length by five in breadth, and is bounded on the north by Abdie, on the south by Kettle, on the west by Auchtermuchty, and on the east by Monimail, consisting chiefly of fine enclosed lands, and some fine plantations rising from the Eden to the hills on the north. The village, of no importance in the way of business, is situated three miles from Auchtermuchty and six from Cupar, near to two roads which cross each other, the one leading from Newburgh to Kirkcaldy, the other from Cupar to Kinross. The railway before-mentioned passes through it. The parish church is a neat building, surmounted by a spire. There is also a public school here. The railway stations are Collessie and Ladybank, on the Perth branch of the North British railway. Acreage, 8,699. Population in 1881, 1,989.

LADYBANK is a village in the above parish, and is of great importance, being a junction station of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the North British Railway, also the post town for this part of the county. The chief business is linen manufacturing, but malting is likewise carried on to a considerable extent. A new Free church, with spire, was erected here in 1876, and a quoad sacra church has also been built. There is also a public school.

KILCONQUHAR,

WITH BARNYARDS, EARLSFERRY, COLINSBURGH, AND ELIE.

THE parish of KILCONQUHAR lies on the shore of the Firth of Forth extending in an oblong form between 7 and 8 miles, from north to south, and varying from 2 to nearly 5 miles in breadth. It is bounded on the north by Ceres and Cameron, and south by Elie and the Firth of Forth, on the east by Carnbee, and on the west by Newburn and Largo. The East of Fife branch of the North British Railway passes about half a mile west of the village. The surface rises from the south, and the soil varies gradually as it recedes from the coast; the flat part of the south is sandy, the rest being all of an upland character. There are many beautiful seats in the parish, of which Balcarres, the residence of the Right Hon. the Earl of Crawford; Kilconquhar House, the residence of the Right Hon. Earl of Lindsay; Charleton House, the residence of Col. John A. Thomson; Lathallan, the residence of Major John M. Kennedy are the most deserving of notice. Kilconquhar Loch is a fine sheet of water, three-quarters of a mile in length, and nearly the same in breadth, with two small islands, which harbour many swans and wild fowls. The parish contains five villages, namely, KILCONQUHAR, BARNYARDS, COLINSBURGH, LARGOWARD, and EARLSFERRY. The latter, which is a royal burgh, is on the sea coast, one mile and a half from Kilconquhar, three from Colinsburgh, and close to the village of Elie. The date of its erection into a royal burgh is uncertain, as its earliest charter was destroyed by a fire in Edinburgh, and a new one was in consequence granted by James IV., by which all its ancient privileges were renewed and confirmed. It is govern by a chief magistrate, one bailie, a treasurer, and seven counc ors. The entire parish of Kilconquhar comprises an area of 1,271 s tute acres, and had a population in 1881 of 2,053, whilst the to v contained 350 of that number; at the same period Earlsferry contained 286, and Largoward 338.

COLINSBURGH is a village of some trade, situate one mile from Kilconquhar, having a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, a good inn, and several well-furnished shops. It was originally built by Colin, third Earl of Balcarres, who died in 1722, and it is named after him. Besides the parish church at Kilconquhar there is a United Presbyterian church at Colinsburgh, and a Board school. In the village a weekly corn market is held on Thursday. Population in 1881, 366.

ELIE is a small parish, containing the village of its own name. It is bounded on the north by Kilconquhar, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by St. Monance, and on the West by Largo and Newburn. Its length is about two miles, and breadth one mile, and it has an area of 2,020 acres. The whole, which is enclosed, is the property of William Baird, Esq., whose elegant residence, Elie House, is situated a little to the north of the village. The grounds are beautifully wooded, and are laid out with great taste, and deserve notice. The village of Elie is at the head of Elie bay, six miles E. from Largo, one mile and a half from Kilconquhar, 2½ miles from Colinsburgh, and the same distance from St. Monance. It is a station on the East of Fife branch of the North British Railway, which passes a little north of the village, which stands so near the sea that the waves wash the walls of some of the houses. The beach is here very fine and sandy, and on one portion of it a species of garnet is found. Many persons resort here in the summer from distant parts to enjoy the bathing, which is excellent; another great source of attraction to visitors being the golfing links at Earlsferry. An elegant club house has been built, and the links are largely frequented by players from all quarters. At some earlier period the village must have been a place of more importance than it is now, for in one of the streets near the sea there are some substantial ancient residences, evidently once the habitation of families of distinction. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and an Independent chapel. A handsome and commodious Board school and master's residence are situated north of the town. The trade of the place is confined to the export of grain and potatoes; the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch here. Population in 1881, 670.

To KIRKCALDY, W. & J. Pattison, from Anstruther, Wednesday & Saturday

KINGHORN

IS a town of considerable antiquity, and a royal burgh and parish, 11¾ miles N. from Edinburgh, 3 s. from Kirkcaldy, and 2½ N.E. from Burntisland; occupying a pleasant situation on the side of a hill, sloping to the Firth of Forth, and exactly opposite to Leith, and on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee branch of the North British Railway. There are two principal streets in the town, one running from east to west, and the other from south to north. An elegant edifice answers the purpose of a town house. Another public erection worthy of notice is a handsome school house; it contains school rooms and a library and museum. There is also a branch of the British Linen Company Bank established here. Kinghorn was invested with the privileges of a royal burgh by King David I., and about that time it is said to have been a royal residence. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and five councillors. The burgh, in conjunction with those of Dysart, Kirkcaldy, and Burntisland, returns one member to Parliament, the present member being Sir George Campbell, K.C.S.I., of Edenwood, Fifeshire. All around the country is fine, with a splendid outlook to the sea, and distant view of the south country beyond the Forth. The branches of trade carried on here are ship building, candle making, and the manufacture of glue. The harbour has fallen to decay, and the nearest now is about half a mile distant, at Petty-Cur, which for many years was the ferry place for Edinburgh, now transferred to Burntisland. In 1887 the municipal authorities purchased on behalf of the community the Links park adjoining the town, for public and recreation grounds. The cost of the ground was £1,050, and about £200 additional has been expended in laying out the golf course, bowling green and tennis court. It is greatly frequented by lovers of the game of golf, for which purpose it is considered to be one of the best courses in the county.

The island of INCHKEITH, which forms part of the parish of Kinghorn, distant about three miles from Petty-Cur, has the appearance of a barren rock; on visiting it, however, both arable and pasture lands are discovered. It also contains a small harbour and a lighthouse, with a revolving light, on the highest point of and standing 235 feet above the sea level. Certain writers say Inchkeith was so called from an old noble family, named Keith, while others go farther back into the mists of antiquity and connect it with Guidi. Here, it is supposed, was raised the town or fortress of Guida, described by Bede, more than eleven hundred years ago, as situated in the middle of the great arm of the sea which runs into Britain from the east. About the year 700, a church or monastery, founded by St. Adamnan, successor to St. Columba, in the abbacy of Iona, was erected on the island. Inchkeith was seized by the English in 1547, and a fort was built on it, which was taken by the French during the regency of Mary, queen of James V. A curious experiment was tried on Inchkeith by James IV. In order to discover the natural and original language of the human race, he sent two infants under the charge of a dumb woman to reside there until the children should arrive at mature age. No authentic record has been handed down to us, but it has been said that they spoke good Hebrew when they grew up. About a mile to the eastward of Kinghorn is the Kirkcaldy Combination Poorhouse for the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Burntisland, and Kinghorn; it occupies a commanding situation near the coast. Further particulars will be found in the account of Kirkcaldy. We may also state for the curious, that this poorhouse was the first institution of the kind assessed for the poor rates in Scotland. The case arose in consequence of the other three parishes refusing to pay the rates assessed by the parishes of Kinghorn, and after being brought before the Lord Ordinary, was, upon appeal, carried to the second division of the court of session, and a decree given in favour of Kinghorn, the expenses in the case, amounting to nearly £300, being defrayed by the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, and Burntisland. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church. There are also commodious public schools situated in the centre of the town. The entire parish of Kinghorn contains an acreage of 5,244, and in 1881 possessed a population of 3,650, of which number 1,790 were returned for the town.

About one mile from Kinghorn, on the Burntisland road, was unveiled with some ceremony on July 19th, 1887, by the Earl of Elgin, Lord Lieutenant of the county, a very handsome monument in the form of a Celtic Cross, to commemorate the memory of Alexander III., who met his death by falling from his horse in 1286. This monument was raised by public subscription, among the subscribers being H.M. the Queen. The inscription reads—"To the Illustrious Alexander III., the last of Scotland's Celtic Kings, who was accidentally killed near this spot, March 19th, MCCLXXXVI. Erected on the Sex-centenary of his death."

KIRKCALDY,

WITH ABBOTSHALL, AUCHTERTOOL, CHAPEL, PATHHEAD, SINCLAIRTOWN, AND GALLATOWN.

KIRKCALDY is a royal burgh of very ancient date, the seat of a presbytery, a seaport, and the capital of its parish, 14 miles N. from Edinburgh, 33 S.W. from Dundee, and 6 N. from Burntisland (all rail distances), on the North British railway (Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee line), the station of which is contiguous to the town. It is situated on the northern shores of the Firth of Forth, and stretches along the base of a range of rising ground to the extent of upwards of three miles. By a recent Act of Parliament the suburbs of Abbotshall, Pathhead, Gallatown, and Sinclairtown, are included in the boundaries of the burgh, the new boundary line thus including portions of the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Kinghorn and Dysart, and the quoad sacra parishes of St. James, Invertiel and Pathhead. From the narrow dimensions of the site on which it stand , the inhabitants have from the first been necessitated to build their habitations in a continuous line along the shore, though without much regard to the regularity of their structure; and having thence elongated most disproportionately, the place from an early period has been styled "the lang toon o' Kirkcaldy," in familiar allusion to its appearance. Though formerly limited to this long street, and a few narrow diverging lanes, houses were in time erected on the ascent behind, or near to the shore in front; and it now comprises many well-built cross streets and detached dwellings, the residence of the opulent classes; so that, when viewed from the sea, the town appears environed by finely-enclosed productive fields, ornamented by the beautiful grounds and conspicuous tower of Raith (the residence of Ronald C. M. Ferguson, Esq., M.P.), and the grounds surrounding the elegant mansion of Dunnikier, the seat of James T. Oswald, Esq. The prospect from the heights is of a different, but equally delightful, character, embracing, as it does, the town and landscape immediately beneath and around, with a view of the busy waters of the Firth of Forth. From a remote date the town of Kirkcaldy has sustained great vicissitudes and fluctuations in its commerce and prosperity. When Charles I. erected it anew into a royal burgh, it had, according to tradition, one hundred ships belonging to it, and ranked as the sixth place of maritime importance in Scotland; but in 1673 the number of vessels in its possession had decreased to twenty-five. On the return of peace in 1763, the trade of the port revived, and the quantity of shipping consequently increased and progressively augmented, so that in 1792 it boasted twenty-six vessels; from this period Kirkcaldy has gradually risen into repute, both as a port and a manufacturing town. The principal importations are flax, timber, grain, &c.; the exports are floor cloth, linoleum, linen, yarn, machinery and coal. The number of vessels belonging to the port has for some years been on the decline. Vessels from this port were employed in the Davis Straits whale fishery for many years, but this trade is now discontinued. A branch from the main line of railway traverses the entire length of the harbour—a great convenience to operations of loading and unloading vessels. The harbour, which has been greatly improved within the last few years, is almost dry at low water, but at full tide is capable of admitting vessels of large burden. The custom house, having control over a considerable line of coast, extending from Aberdour to Anstruther, has been removed to Burntisland. The prominent trade of Kirkcaldy and neighbourhood bears an intimate affinity with that of Dundee, consisting of the spinning of flax, tow, jute, and the weaving of linen goods for home and foreign consumption; striped hollands, dowlas, ticks, checks, sailcloths, &c., are amongst the fabrics produced, and in the manufacture of which there are several extensive power-loom factories in full operation; there are also several bleaching fields and dye-works, and four china and earthenware manufactories, where a superior class of goods is made. Kirkcaldy is now the centre of the floor cloth and linoleum manufacture of the kingdom; there are five factories, employing a large number of hands. The other branches include brass and iron founding, machine making, and a considerable corn, malt and meal trade. The general commerce of the place is assisted by branches of five banking establishments—namely, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited (who have also each a branch at Sinclairtown), the Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company. There is also a branch of the Kirkcaldy Savings Bank. There are now many elegant shops, with extensive stocks of fashionable, ornamental, and useful goods, and there is a good hotel. The streets are well paved and lighted with gas. The celebrated Adam Smith, author of "The Wealth of Nations," was born here in the year 1723.

The civic government of the town is vested in a town council consisting of thirty-four members, of whom one is provost and admiral of the burgh and harbour, four bailies, one dean of guild, and one treasurer. The council are also commissioners of police under the General Police Act, and local authority under the Health Act. The management of the harbour is vested in a board of commissioners, fourteen in number, consisting of the provost and bailies and others. The burgh is conjoined with Dunfermline, Kinghorn, Dysart and Burntisland in sending one member to Parliament, the present representative being Sir George Campbell. In 1829 a handsome building of large dimensions was completed to supersede the old town house. It contains a hall for burgh and district meetings, a burgh court and record rooms, an office for the town clerk, and other apartments. The sheriff holds a court every Wednesday for the disposal of ordinary debts recovery, and small debt cases; and the justices of the peace likewise sit, when required, for adjudicating claims under other pecuniary acts. A Corn Exchange is situated in Cowan street, the first stone of which was laid with masonic honours in May, 1859. The combination poorhouse is a conspicuous building, beautifully situated on the lands of Abden, in the parish of Kinghorn, commanding an extensive view of the Firth of Forth. It was erected in 1849, is capable of accommodating 150 inmates, and was opened for their reception in May, 1850. The total cost considerably exceeded £5,000. It is the joint property of the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Burntisland, and Kinghorn, nearly half being held by the parish of Kirkcaldy.

The parish church of Kirkcaldy, which is in the Gothic style, stands on an eminence above and at the back of the town; the other places of worship are the parish churches of Invertiel, Abbotthall, St. James, and Pathhead, six Free churches, three United Presbyterian churches, one Episcopalian, one Independent, three Baptist, and one Roman Catholic chapel. The principal educational establishments consist of two handsome schools erected by the School Board of the parliamentary burgh of Kirkcaldy, at a cost of about £10,000, and capable of containing upwards of 1,000 pupils; the old burgh school of Kirkcaldy having room for upwards of 400 pupils (this school includes a division for teaching the higher branches of education under a rector and two assistants); and three schools under the charge of the School Board of the parliamentary burgh of Dysart, capable of accommodating about 900 pupils. There are also three schools established under the will of the late Robert Philp, Esq., of Edenshead, for instructing children of both sexes selected from amongst the poorest inhabitants. These schools can accommodate 600 pupils. The property bequeathed by this gentleman for erecting and sustaining schools in these places is estimated at nearly £70,000. The pupils are admitted between the ages of six and fifteen, and are taught only the plainest elementary branches; thirty shillings per annum is allowed for clothing each pupil. There is also a charitable trust by John Thomson, for educating poor children, and for annuities for the support of poor inhabitants. There are also private seminaries for the education of young ladies. Four newspapers are issued from the press of this town. The market, which is a stock market for the sale of grain, is held on Saturday. The parish of Kirkcaldy embraces an area of 1,177 acres, and in 1871 contained a population of 7,008; the parliamentary burgh at the same period having 12,422. The numbers for 1881 were: for the parish, 8,528, and for the burgh, 15,055. The population of the extended burgh of Kirkcaldy is now (1888) over 30,000.

ABBOTSHALL, although a distinct parish, is now included in the burgh of Kirkcaldy, as before mentioned. Its principal street, called Links street (nearly a mile long), runs west in a direct line with the High street of the town named. The trade and manufactures are of the same character as those of Kirkcaldy; and more immediately in Abbotshall are dye works, an earthenware manufactory, and a large corn mill. The places of worship are Established and Free churches, and the schools are parochial, Philp's Institution, and subscription. The general appearance of the parish, the extent of which is about 2 miles either way, is very agreeable, rising gradually from the coast northward into tolerably high grounds. Raith House, before noticed, and also the small village of CHAPEL are in this parish. Acreage, 4,185. Population in 1881, 6,485.

PATHHEAD, now included in the burgh as before noticed, is situated chiefly on the face of a hill, looking towards the Firth of Forth, and is joined by two other districts, respectively named GALLATOWN and SINCLAIRTOWN, also in the same burgh. The manufacture of linen goods is briskly followed in these places. Dowlas, ticks, sheeting, &c. of excellent quality are produced both by hand and power; flax spinning is also carried on to some extent. At Sinclairtown there are three earthenware manufactories, and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and at Pathhead is a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. The places of worship are an Established church, two Free churches, and a meeting house for Baptists. The means of education are not wanting, a commodious school house having been erected in Pathhead some years since, by the trustees of the late Robert Philp, Esq. of Edenshead; and in 1849, an auxiliary parochial or subscription school was opened, also a subscription school in Sinclairtown, and one in Gallatown, in all of which a sound and useful education is imparted.

AUCHTERTOOL is a small inland parish and village, the latter situated 4 miles W. from Kirkcaldy, and about the same distance N.W. from Kinghorn, and in the midst of a beautifully diversified landscape, bounded on the north by Abbotshall, on the south by Kinghorn, on the east by Auchterderran, and on the west by Beath. Its length is seven miles and its breadth 1¼. Agriculture is the principal pursuit of the inhabitants, there not being any kind of manufacture or trade in the place, except a distillery. There is an Established church and a Board school here. From a little lake, called Camillaloch, in this parish, the river Teel takes its rise; on the verge of the loch are the ruins of Camilla Castle, or "Hallyards." Auchtertcel, is said to have been the original name of the parish, deriving the appellation from its situation on the banks of the Teel. The acreage of the parish is 2,738, the population in 1881 being 706.

LARGO (UPPER AND LOWER),

LUNDILL MILL, AND THE PARISH OF NEWBURN.

LARGO parish lies on the shore of the Firth of Forth, between Newburn and Kilconquhar on the east, and Leven on the west, its inland quarters being bounded by Ceres. The parish contains three villages, one called UPPER (or KIRKTON of) LARGO, LOWER LARGO, and LUNDIN MILL; the first is situated a mile from the sea, on the road leading from Leven to Anstruther—3 miles N.W. from the former, 9 W. from the latter, 11 S. by W. from St. Andrews, 9 S. from Cupar, and 12 N.E. from Kirkcaldy. Its length from north to south is nearly four miles and a half, and its average breadth three miles. The general surface is diversified by running hills and valleys, interspersed with various small woods. The most striking feature in the landscape is Largo Law, a conical hill, with a double summit covered with verdure to upwards of 900 feet above the sea. From its top a splendid view of the Firth of Forth, with its islands, and the opposite shore of the Lothians, is obtained. Almost the whole of the land is in a high state of cultivation. At Lower Largo are the net manufacturing works of Mr. David Gillies, also the oil works of Messrs. David Russell & Co. The minerals are coal and limestone, the latter being most excellent in quality, and, until recently, was extensively wrought. In Upper Largo, which is a very agreeable little village, stands the parish church, an ancient Gothic fabric, with a spire rising from the centre. This was the birthplace of the celebrated Scottish admiral, Sir Andrew Wood, who in the reign of James IV. defeated the English fleet under Stephen Bull, and otherwise defended the shores of Scotland at his own private expense. The East of Fife branch of the North British Railway Company passes within a short distance of the village of Lower Largo, where there is a station. A hospital, which stands in the village of Kirkton, was erected by means of an endowment by a Mr. John Wood, a native of the place; it is a handsome building, in the Gothic style. The intention of the founder was one of a peculiar nature—any man "of the name of Wood" may have admission here, to whatever part of Scotland he may belong. The foundation provides the inmates with beds and bedding, the produce of the gardens, and £15 per annum. The National Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch, and a Savings Bank is also established. Both Upper and Lower Largo are favourite resorts for sea bathing, and attract a great number of visitors in the bathing season. George Johnston, Esq. of Lathrisk, is lord of the manor, and principal landowner. In 1881 the parish of Largo, the acreage of which is 7,386, had a population of 2,234.

LOWER LARGO is a fishing village in the parish of Largo, one mile S.W. from Upper Largo, seated at the head of an indentation of the Firth of Forth, called Largo Bay; it stands at the efflux of a rivulet named the Keil, whose estuary forms a harbour to the place. This village would have remained amongst the most obscure of coast villages but from the circumstance of its having been the birthplace of Alexander Selkirk, rendered famous by the pen of De Foe as "Robinson Crusoe." The house in which Selkirk was born stood here, but from its decayed state was demolished. It was an ordinary cottage of one storey and a garret, and was stationed on the north side of the main street of Largo. A descendant of this person, of the name of Catherine Selkirk, was resident in this village until her death, which occurred in 1862. Mr. David Gillies, of Cardy Works, also a descendant of the family, has erected, on the site of his birthplace, a very handsome life-size bronze statue to Alexander Selkirk, which was unveiled 11th December, 1885, by the Countess of Aberdeen. The tablet bears the inscription: "In memory of Alexander Selkirk, mariner, the original of Robinson Crusoe, who lived in the Island of Juan Fernandez, in complete solitude, for four years and four months. He died 1723, Lieutenant of H.M.S. Weymouth, aged 47 years." In the parish are edifices for congregations of the Established and Free churches, Baptists and United Presbyterians. With the churches schools are connected. On the east bank of the Keil are the ruins of the ancient castle of Pitcruvie.

LUNDIN MILL is a village adjoining Lower Largo, in the parish of Largo. There are a few handsome villas at Lundin Links, where there is a station on the Leven and East of Fife Railway. It is a place of great antiquity. The house of Lundin has been taken down, but the square tower, which formed part of the ancient castle of Lundin, still remains. It was formerly the residence of a family of that name, who held property of great extent in the district as early as the reign of David II. Here also are the three "Standing Stanes of Lundin." They are supposed to have once formed part of a Druidical temple, and to have occupied their present site for about 2,000 years. Population in 1881, 386.

NEWBURN is a parish lying two miles east of Lower Largo, bounded on the north by Kilconquhar, on the south by Largo Bay, on the east by Elie, and on the west by Largo. Its length is three miles and breadth one mile and a half, and it embraces 3,039 acres. About three-fourths of the land is under cultivation, the remainder being pasture and woodland. The parish being quite rural, the inhabitants depend on agriculture for employment. There is a parish church and school. In accordance with a bequest of Mr. John Wood, the parochial teacher receives an additional emolument sufficient for the board and education of six boys of the name of Wood, who enter at the age of seven and leave at fifteen. Wood's school has recently been transferred into Wood's trust for burseries, by H. M. Commissioners, for the benefit of the adjoining parishes. Population in 1881, 344.

LESLIE,

WITH THE PARISH OF KINGLASSIE.

LESLIE is a parish and burgh of barony, containing the manufacturing town of its own name, 12 miles E. from Kinross, the like distance S.W. from Cupar, 9 N.W. from Kirkcaldy, and 3 W. from Markinch. Its length is upwards of four miles, and its breadth three miles. It is seated along the summit of a ridge of ground rising from the Leven on the southern and a shallow vale on the northern side, and situated on a public road up the Vale of Leven, leading into Kinross-shire. The town consists principally of one street, running from east to west. It is a very ancient place, often frequented by King James when holding court of Falkland; and here is the scene laid of the song of the "Jolly Beggars." Of its age, the irregularity of the streets and architecture of the houses (being built with the gable ends to the street) are proofs. Nearly all the dwellings are provided with gardens behind, and the environs display much rural beauty; the streets of the town are gas-lighted. At the eastern entrance to the town is a pleasant public green, of a triangular figure; in former times this area was the scene of various pastimes, and the place of annual meeting for the pedlars or packmen of Scotland. Many improvements have been made in the burgh within the last sixty years, and during that period its size has been nearly doubled. This increase is attributable to the prosperity of its manufactures, consisting of flax spinning, paper making, and bleaching; the works of these are chiefly established on the banks of the Leven. A branch railway runs from the west end of the town to join the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British Railway at Markinch. A Branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, was opened here in 1850. Leslie is governed by the Police Commissioners. The Hon. George Waldegrave Leslie has a seat (Leslie House) at the eastern end of the town; around the mansion are some fine pleasure grounds and agreeable plantations. The places of worship are the parish church, which was a few years ago rebuilt; a quoad sacra church at Prinlaws, the west end of the town; a Free and two United Presbyterian churches, and a Baptist chapel. There are two public schools in the parish. There is also a library established under the title of the "Leslie Institute Library," which is now connected with the Young Men's Christian Association and Reading Room. It consists of upwards of 1,000 volumes of valuable books. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of April, and on the first Friday in October. The parish of Leslie has an area of 5,028 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 4,345.

KINGLASSIE is a parish extending five miles in length by two in breadth at its narrowest part and four at its broadest, embracing 7,717 acres. It is bounded on the north by Leslie, on the south by Auchterderran, on the east by Markinch, and on the west by Portmoat. It is watered by the Lochty and the Ore, tributary streams of the Leven. On the first of these stands the irregular village of Kinglassie, which is three miles from Leslie and three and a half N.E. from Lochgelly. The inhabitants of the village are principally supported by agriculture. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church. A fair is entitled to be held on Third Wednesday in May, and on the Thursday before Michaelmas (o.s.) Population of the parish in 1881, 1,292.

POST OFFICE, LESLIE, Cecilia Easson, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive at 9 a.m. and 6 30 p.m., and from Markinch a 3 30 p.m., and are despatched at 6 45 a.m., and 1 15, 4 40 and 7 40 p.m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

LEVEN,

WITH INNER LEVEN AND THE PARISH OF SCOONIE.

LEVEN is a town in the parish of Scoonie, 9 miles N.E. from Kirkcaldy, 4 N.E. from Wemyss, and 3 S.W. from Largo, situate on the coast of the Firth of Forth, on the mouth of the river Leven, from which the place takes its name. The town consists of three principal streets, irregularly built, but contains some good houses, with several lanes and detached residences. A number of elegant villas are situated at the Links, a little to the east of the town, and several handsome mansions are in the neighbourhood. A line of railway, the East of Fife branch, from Thornton station on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the North British Railway, gives the town the benefit and facility for that mode of transit; this branch railway is now extended east to St. Andrews and Dundee. The town has also the benefit of a harbour. A new dock has been constructed at a cost of about £40,000. It is 500 feet long by 250 feet broad, with a depth of water on the sill of 14 feet, and vessels have been loaded here up to 400 tons. It was opened in January, 1880. The principal imports are flax, tow, barley, linseed, bones and timber. The town is greatly improved, and its trade augmented; so that Leven may now be pronounced one of the most thriving of the small towns in the county of Fife. Over the Leven, and connecting this town with the village of INNER LEVEN, is a handsome stone bridge. The staple trade of Leven is the preparation and spinning of flax, and seed crushing, paper making, engineering, &c., the mills of the first-named trade especially, employing a considerable number of hands. A bone dust mill, salt works, and rope making, are the other leading branches carried on here and in the vicinity. The Fife Coal Co. whose offices adjoin the railway station, are the principal employers of labour in Leven. There are three branch banking houses. During the summer months Leven is the resort of a number of respectable families from London, Edinburgh, and the interior for the benefit of sea bathing. The Caledonian Hotel, the principal of the kind, affords superior accommodation either to families, tourists, or to commercial gentlemen; to it has been added a large posting establishment. Leven is a burgh of barony, and has now a chief and junior magistrates. The purposes of lighting, cleaning, and water are carried out in the burgh by commissioners appointed under the General Police Act for Scotland, which was some time ago adopted here. The sheriff holds a small debt circuit court here every three months, namely, the Friday after the second Monday in January, April, and July, and Friday after the first Monday of October. The Greig Institute is a substantial building, of chaste design, erected in 1873, by public subscription. It contains news room, library, billiard room, and class room for techinal subjects under Government examination. The scheme originated as a People's Institute, and its name and history are associated with Mr. Greig, of Glencarse, who gave the site and £1,000 towards the building fund. There are a number of handsome houses and cottages on the Links at the south part of the town, where there are some fine open downs, on which several golfing societies exercise in that healthy amusement, and annually play for gold and silver medals. There is also an excellant bowling green at the Links. Salt water and brine baths have recently been opened, and are much appreciated by visitors. Population in 1881, including Inner Leven, 3,067.

SCOONIE is a parish on the west coast of the county. It is bounded on the north by Kennoway, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Largo, and on the west by Wemyss. Its length from north to south is five miles, and its greatest breadth is two miles and a half. The surface inland rises with a gradual ascent to an elevation of 600 feet, and there are several heights which command extensive views of the Firth of Forth and the Lothians. The land generally is in a high state of cultivation. The minerals are ochre and coal. It contains the town of Leven, which is a burgh of barony. The parish church stands close to the town; a Free church, a United Presbyterian, and an Episcopal church are the other places of worship. The parish comprises an area of 4,091 statute acres, and had a population in 1881 of 3,730.

LIMEKILNS,

BRUCEHAVEN AND CHARLESTOWN.

LIMEKILNS with BRUCEHAVEN is a small seaport in the parish of Dunfermline, its post town, 3 miles S. of that town, situated on the north bank of the Frith of Forth. It was at one period a place of considerable trade, but at the present day the harbour is chiefly made use of for the mooring of essels. Shipbuilding is carried on at Brucehaven shipyard. There is a congregation of United Presbyterians, and a public school here. Population in 1881, 698.

CHARLESTOWN is a village a short distance from Limekilns, and also in the parish of Dunfermline, its post town, from which it is four miles distant. It is the property of the Earl of Elgin. There are extensive lime works in the vicinity, from which large quantities of lime are exported annually. It is likewise the shipping port for several of the adjacent collieries. The harbour—which was formed by the above nobleman—is now the property of the North British Railway Company, and affords excellent accommodation for the loading and unloading of vessels. Two manufactories for salt and an ironfoundry are among the other businesses of this flourishing little place. There is also a public school here. Population in 1881, 632.

POST OFFICE, LIMEKILNS, Elizabeth Barber, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Dunfermline) at 8 25 and 11 45 a.m. and are despatched thereto at 1 50 and 5 45 p.m.——The nearest Money Order Office is at CHARLESTOWN.

LOCHGELLY,

WITH AUCHTERDERRAN, BEATH, BALLINGRY, COWDENBEATH, KELTY, AND OAKFIELD.

LOCHGELLY is a police burgh and rising village in the parish of Auchterderran, eight miles N.W. from Kirkcaldy, and the same distance E. from Dunfermline. About a mile and a half distant are the ruins of the castle of Lochore. There is a station three-quarters of a mile from Lochgelly, on the Dunfermline branch of the North British Railway. Close thereto are the works and offices of the Lochgelly Iron and Coal Company, Limited. At the works are four furnaces for smelting, but they have not been in use for some years. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established in the village, and there is also a respectable hotel. The places of worship are a quoad sacra church, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church and a Roman Catholic chapel. The inhabitants are principally engaged in the coal mines, which abound in the neighbourhood. The parish church of Auchterderran is at the hamlet of that name, two and a half miles from Lochgelly. There are two large Board schools. Population of Lochgelly in 1881, 2,601.

AUCHTERDERRAN is a parish in the western part of the county, bounded by Beath and Ballingry on the west, Abbotshall and Auchtertool on the south and south-east, Dysart on the east, and Kinglassie and Portmoak on the north. It has an irregular outline, and is about four miles long from north to south, and about three miles broad. The water of Orr flows eastward through the parish, and in the southern part there is a sheet of water called Lochgelly, which discharges itself by a small rivulet into that stream. Though the soil is only moderately fertile, the inhabitants apply themselves assiduously to agriculture, and have much improved the condition and appearance of the district. Most of the parish is under tillage, and the rest in pasture. A considerable bed of coal and ironstone traverses this part of the county. The former has long been celebrated for its excellent quality; the latter is of the black band variety. Lochgelly is the only village of any consequence in this parish. There is an Established church and a public school. In 1881 the entire parish of Auchterderran, the area of which is 7,818 acres, had a population of 4,332.

BEATH is a parish about four miles in length and about three in breadth. Its boundaries are: on the west, Dunfermline; on the east, Ballingry and Auchterderran; on the north, Cleish; on the south, Aberdour and Dalgetty. The ground is hilly, and is watered by the Kelty and a stream which flows from Loch Fitty, a shallow lake on the western boundary. The soil is in some parts good, in others inferior. Several collieries are in active operation, and give employment to most of the inhabitants. Acreage, 6,345; population in 1881, 5,442.

COWDENBEATH is a populous village in the parish of Beath, two miles W. from Lochgelly, and is a station on the same line of railway as Lochgelly. Here are the extensive collieries of the Cowdenbeath Coal Company. There is a public hall here. The parish church is a mile N.W. of the village. There are also Free and United Presbyterian churches, a chapel for Baptists, and a Board school. Population in 1881, 2,796.

KELTY and OAKFIELD are villages in this parish, and adjoin Blairadam, their post town; they are about 3½ miles from Lochgelly, the former being a station on the Kinross branch of the North British railway. At Kelty are the collieries of the Fife Coal Company, Limited, and there are a Free church and a Board school.

BALLINGRY is a parish three miles in length and about 1¾ in breadth, and is 2¼ miles from Lochgelly, its post town. It is bounded on the north by Portmoak, on the east and south by Auchterderran and Kinglassie, and on the west by Beath and Cleish, a small corner of the village of Lochgelly is in this parish, also the mining villages of LUMPHINANS and LOCHORE. Coal is raised in abundance in the parish, about one-half of which is under tillage, and the other half wood and pasture. There was formerly a considerable loch in this parish, called Loch Orr, but it is now all drained and in a state of cultivation. The only place of worship is the Established church, situated in the north-west of the parish. There is a public school here. Acreage, 4,621; population in 1881, 1,065.

POST OFFICE, LOCHGELLY, James Bethune, Post Master.—Letters arrive from Edinburgh and the South and Dundee and the North at 8 45 a.m. and 6 30 p.m., and from Dunfermline and the West at 8 30 a.m. and 6 10 p.m., and are despatched to Edinburgh and the South and Dundee and the North at 7 a.m. and 1 30 and 4 20 p.m., to Dunfermline and the West at 8 a.m. and 5 50 p.m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

MARKINCH,

KENNOWAY, AND THE VILLAGES OF BALCURVIE, COALTON OF BALGONIE, MILTON OF BALGONIE, STAR, THORNTON, WINDYGATES, AND WOODSIDE.

MARKINCH is a parish containing the village of its own name, and THORNTON, WINDYGATES, MILTON OF BALGONIE, COALTON OF BALGONIE, WOODSIDE, INNER LEVEN, and BALCURVIE. Markinch is a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British railway, and is situated near the centre of the parish at a distance of ten miles S. from Cupar, eight N.E. from Kirkcaldy, and between six and seven from Leven. It occupies an open situation on a piece of irregular rising ground, and on the highest part is seated the church. A branch line of railway from the North British main line connects this place with Leslie. There are extensive paper mills, bleachfields, a woollen manufactory, and corn mills in active operation. The district round abounds in coal. In the village there is a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians. The parish of Markinch, which embraces 9,821 acres, is bounded by Kennoway on the east, on the west by Dysart, Kinglassie, and Leslie; on the north by Falkland and Kettle; and on the south by Wemyss; it extends from north to south five miles and a half, by a mean breadth of two, its southern end being considerably wider. The parish has a general slope towards the south, and is under the best state of cultivation, enclosure, and plantation, and must be ranked among the most beautiful parts of the shire. It is traversed by the streams of the Leven and the Ore, and the great road through the county crosses it. The North British railway is carried over the first named river by means of a viaduct of ten arches, nearly ninety feet in height. Balgonie Castle, the property of Barrington Charles Balfour, Esq., of Newton Don, is an edifice of great antiquity and strength; it stands on the south bank of the Leven, in the midst of some finely wooded grounds. About half a mile to the east is Balfour House the seat of Charles Bethune, Esq., surrounded by pleasing enclosures and plantations, and in a delightful situation. Balbirnie is an elegant mansion, the seat of John Balfour, Esq., and lies about half a mile north-west of the village. A spacious town hall and a good school were erected here a few year since. The village, altogether, has of late years undergone great improvement. WINDYGATES, now the head of a post district, in this parish, stands on the high road between Markinch and Leven, about two miles west from the latter. Contiguous to the village is the extensive distillery of The Distillers' Company, Limited; also the flax spinning mills of Messrs. G. & W. Beveridge, and the bleach works of the Haugh Bleaching Co. Close to Windygates is CAMERON BRIDGE, a station on the Leven and East of Fife railway. A public school has been erected, called Balcurvie Public School. Population of the parish in 1881 5,863, and of the village, 1,273.

WOODSIDE, in the parish of Markinch, is a small village about one and a half miles south-west from Markinch, its post town, and two from Thornton. The inhabitants are chiefly employed at the paper mills and bleachfields in the neigbourhood.

MILTOWN, OR MILTON OF BALGONIE, is a village about midway between Windygates and Markinch, in the parish of Markinch. There are an Established church, a public school, and a sub-post office. Population in 1881, 375.

COALTOWN, or COALTON OF BALGONIE, lies one mile and a half south from Markinch, its post town and parish. The inhabitants are principally employed at the Balgonie Colliery, and bleachfields in the immediate neighbourhood. There is a public school. Population in 1881, 441.

THORNTON is a village in the parish of Markinch, situated near the south-eastern extremity of the parish, and close to the THORNTON JUNCTION on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the North British and the Leven and East of Fife railways. There is a joint station here. The Dysart Combination Poorhouse, erected in 1862, at a cost of about £6,000, is situated about half a mile from this village; it is a handsome stone building, capable of receiving 130 of the poor of the surrounding parishes. There are also a chapel of the Established Church, a school, and a post office. Population in 1881, 552.

BALCURVIE is situated on an eminence about half a mile from Windygates, its post town, in the parish of Markinch, about three miles east from the latter place, and one mile south from Kennoway. The inhabitants are principally employed at the flax spinning mills of Messrs. G. and W. Beveridge, and the distillery of The Distillers' Company, Limited. Agriculture is carried on extensively. The land in and around Balcurvie is under a high state of cultivation. There is a public school here.

KENNOWAY parish, which lies to the east of Markinch, is three miles and a half long and two broad, situated on an acclivity arising from the south to the north; it embraces 3,965 acres, and is bounded on the north by Kettle, on the south and west by Markinch, and on the east by Scoonie. It commands a delightful and extensive prospect from its southern side of the Firth of Forth, its islands and the Lothians; while from its northern extremity the view extends over the greater part of the counties of Fife, Angus, and Perth, including the Grampian hills. The village of Kennoway is situated about four miles from that of Markinch, and three from Leven, at the head of a beautiful and romantic glen, the sides of which are precipitous and rocky, and contain caves, which were probably used as places of refuge and retreat for maurauders in ancient times. Agriculture appears to be the principal pursuit of the inhabitants. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians. There is a public school and a post office. About two miles from Kennoway, and one and a half from Markinch, is the village of STAR, in the former parish. It has a public school and post office. Agriculture alone supplies occupation for its inhabitants. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,560, and of the village, 770.

NEWBURGH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABDIE, DUNBOG, AND FLISK.

NEWBURGH is a royal burgh, seaport, and the capital of its parish, 33 miles N. from Edinburgh, 15 miles S.W. from Dundee, 11 S.E. from Perth, 10 N.W. from Cupar, and 5 N. from Auchtermuchty, situated on the line of the North British Railway, and on the south bank of the Tay. It consists of one long street in the direction of east and west, parrallel with the course of the river, and a lane or two leading towards the shore, where there are convenient quays for the shipping of merchandise, and a spacious harbour. The Tay above mentioned being navigable only for vessels of about two hundred tons, those of greater burthen put in here to discharge their cargoes, which are sent to Perth by lighters. That the town is of considerable antiquity is unquestionable; according to some authorities its origin is ascribed to the fostering patronage of the adjacent abbey of Lindores, founded in 1178, by David, Earl of Huntingdon, on his return from the Holy Land. The unfortunate Duke of Rothsay, who was starved to death in Falkland Palace, was buried here. The ruins are a little eastward of the town. Several stone coffins have at different times been discovered, and are still to be seen. The name of New-burgh is supposed to be conferred upon it in contradistinction to the ancient decayed burgh of Abernethy, which lies about two miles to the west. Formerly the greater proportion of the habitations were low-built and roofed with thatch, but of late years a better style of architecture has prevailed, and there are now many good houses. The Town Hall stands near the centre of the town, and the parish church, nearly opposite to it, is a handsome edifice, erected in 1833, and dedicated to St. Catherine. In the year 1266 the town was erected into a burgh of regality, and in 1631 Charles I. granted to the place a charter, forming the community into a royal burgh, in virtue of which grant Newburgh is said to have sent a commissioner to the Scottish estates, but being unable to pay his expenses, which was then the custom, the burgh, upon petition, was relieved from the burden of parliamentary distinction, and it has never since been oppressed by representative honours. There is, however, at the present time, no evidence of it ever having sent a member to the Scottish parliament. There are two ancient crosses within the parish, one at Mugdrum, about thirteen feet high, and the Macduff cross, or rather the pedestal of it, of great interest, from its having been granted to Macduff as a sanctuary, for his successful aid against Macbeth. The government is vested in a provost, two bailies, and fourteen councillors, with a treasurer and a town clerk. Within the last fifty years, Newburgh has risen very considerably in wealth and outward appearance through the industrious habits of its population, and the traffic carried on at its port. There is a branch banking establishment—the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, also a Savings Bank in connection with the bank. The manufacture of linen goods may be considered the staple trade of the place, exclusive of which the business in corn and timber is by no means inconsiderable; of the former especially large exports are made. The benefits derived from the salmon fishery and from the sale of fruit also add considerably to the welfare of the place. To the parish of Newburgh many interesting particulars belong, which the reader will find amply detailed in Messrs. Chambers' excellent Gazetteer, and also in the history of Newburgh, by Alexander Laing, Esq. F.S.A. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, an United Presbyterian and Evangelical Union churches, and a Baptist chapel. A fair is held on the third Friday in June. The principal landowners are Edmund Balfour Patterson-Hay, Esq., of Mugdrum, and Robert Cathcart, Esq., of Pitcairlie. The entire parish of Newburgh has an area of 1,365 acres, and had a population in 1881 of 2,191.

ABDIE parish, 2 miles S.E. from Newburgh, which is of considerable extent, but greatly intersected by other parishes, lies on the south bank of the river Tay amongst those highlands to the westward which have acquired the appellation of the Ochil Hills. The surface is remarkably uneven, but the soil is in general fertile. It possesses quarries of whinstone, considerable quantities of which are shipped and used for street paving. The parish is well watered with lochs, the chief of which is the Loch of Lindores, about a mile in length and of irregular breadth. This piece of water is well stored with fish, and being surrounded by some romantic scenery is a beautiful object in the view of the country. There is a parish church and a handsome public school. MOUNT PLEASANT, GLENBURNIE and LINDORES are hamlets in this parish. Acreage, 6,371. Population in 1881, 983.

DUNBOG is a small parish, 3 miles long and one mile broad situated 4½ miles E. from Newburgh and 5 N.W. from Cupar, bounded on the north by the Tay, on the south by Monimail, on the east by Moonzie, and on the west by Abdie. It consists of a valley lying between two ridges of the Ochil Hills; the soil is of a rich black mould, which produces abundant crops of every description. There is a parish church and a handsome public school, the latter adorned with clock and bell. The nearest railway station is at Newburgh. Acreage, 2,324. Population in 1881, 219.

FLISK is a parish stretching 5 miles on the banks of the Tay. It is 6 miles E. from Newburgh and 5 N.W. from Cupar. It is bounded on the north by the Tay, on the south by Creich and Abdie, on the east by Belmerino, and on the west by Dunbog. The soil, although of a clayey nature, is nevertheless fertile and well cultivated from the shore of the river to the Ochil Hills, a portion of which are situated in this parish. There is a church and a public school in the parish. The nearest railway station is at Newburgh. Acreage, 2,614. Population in 1881, 259.

NEWPORT,

WITH FORGAN, BALMERINO, AND GAULDRY.

NEWPORT, a handsome village in the parish of Forgan, stretching along the Firth of Tay, is picturesquely situated, directly opposite to Dundee (its post town), about 2 miles S. therefrom, and 3 miles S.W. from Tayport, the ground sloping upwards to a considerable height from the river Tay. Many elegant villas have been erected; and as there is constant communication with Dundee by railway since the opening of the new Tay Bridge, and also by the steamers which ply hourly, and the climate being salubrious and comparatively mild, it has now become a popular suburb of Dundee. Newport was made a burgh in November, 1887. It possesses five handsome churches, a commodious public hall, erected at a cost of £4,000, and a Board school, built in 1878, to accommodate upwards of 400 scholars. The south end of the Tay Bridge is at WORMIT, about a mile to the west of Newport. There are two railway stations here, one at East Newport for goods and passengers, and one at West Newport for passengers only. Population of Newport in 1881, 2,311.

FORGAN parish extends for about 4 miles in length and about 2¼ miles in breadth, along the south bank of the Firth of Tay, exactly opposite the town of Dundee, and comprises 4,983 acres. It is bounded by Ferry-Port-on-Craig on the east, Balmerino on the west, and Leuchars and Kilmany on the south. The parish church of Forgan is nearly 2 miles inland, being 10 miles N.E. from Cupar and the same distance N.W. from St. Andrews. There is also a Board school. The landward part of the parish is richly wooded and well cultivated. The mansion house of St. Fort, the residence of Miss Stewart, standing out conspicuously in the landscape, is in this parish; and about 1 mile W. from Newport is the small harbour of WOODHAVEN. Newport is the nearest railway station. Population of the parish in 1881, 3,308.

BALMERINO, or Balmerinoch (pronounced Balmernie), is a parish lying on the south bank of the river Tay, from 5½ to 6 miles W. from Newport, extending about 3½ miles in length and 2½ in breadth. The surface is a gradual decline to the side of the river. The harbour of Balmerino is small, though at one time a considerable quantity of grain was exported from it, but this trade has now declined. The kirk and little hamlet lie on the road along the low ground from the Ferry to Newburgh; and there is a Free church at Logie. To the west, and on a slip of ground intruding upon the waters of the Tay, stands the ancient village of Balmerino, adjacent to which are the ruins of the once famed abbey, a beautiful structure, begun by Alexander II. and his mother, Emergarde, daughter of the Earl of Beaumont, in 1229. These ruins, which are richly clothed with ivy and surrounded with some fine tall trees, are much admired by strangers. The nearest railway station is at Newport. Acreage 3,481. Population in 1881, 664.

GAULDRY, a small village in the above parish, is about 4 miles S.W from Newport. Here is a Board school. The aspect of the country is of an undulating character, and agricultural. The nearest railway station is at Newport.

KIRKTON is a small hamlet in the parish of Balmerino.

PITTENWEEM AND ST. MONANCE,

WITH THE PARISH OF CARNBEE.

PITTENWEEM is a royal burgh and seaport, in the parish of its name, 24 miles N.N.E. from Edinburgh, 21 N.N.E. from Kirkcaldy, 5 S.W. from Crail, 10 S.E. from St. Andrews, and 3½ E. from Kilconquhar; situated on the course of the Firth of Forth, one mile from West Anstruther, and occupying rather an elevated site of ground above the harbour. It is bounded on the east by Wester Anstruther, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the north by Carnbee, and on the west by St. Monance. Its length is one mile and a half and breadth half a mile. It consists of three good streets, with a few by-thoroughfares, the houses generally bearing an ancient aspect. The dwellings around the harbour are of a respectable appearance; and over this part of the town stand the remains of the priory of Pittenweem, the date of which is not with certainty known. Exclusive of some fragments of the religious edifice, there is a quadrangular range of curious antique buildings entire, said to have been the residence of the prior and other superior officers of the establishment. These remains exhibit a fine specimen of the domestic ecclesiastic architecture of the ages anterior to the Reformation. Adjacent to the monastic ruins stands the parish church, an old edifice with a turreted spire. Pittenweem was constituted a royal burgh by James V. in 1537. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and eight councillors; and joins with Cupar, St. Andrews, the Anstruthers, Crail, and Kilrenny, in sending one member to Parliament. Between the period of Pittenweem being erected into a royal burgh and 1639, it appears that it was a place of considerable note and trade; but, from the latter period to the year of 1645, it suffered severely—no fewer than thirteen sail of large vessels belonging to this port having been either taken by the enemy or wrecked. It is now a fishing station of some importance, and fish curing is carried on rather extensively, in addition to which the trade in grain is of some consequence. The places of worship are the parish, Episcopalian, and United Presbyterian churches; it contains also two schools. It was at Pittenweem that the robbery was committed upon the collector of the excise by Wilson and Robertson, which led to the outrages of the Porteous mob and the consequent catastrophe; the house in which this transaction took place is still standing on the north side of the street, north of the church. There is a station on the East of Fife branch of the North British line. The area of the parish is 663 statute acres, and its population was in 1881, 2,119.

ST. MONANCE (or St. Monans) is a parish one mile and a half from Pittenweem, on the same coast as the latter place, containing the village or small town of its own name, and that of ABERCROMBIE. The parish measures a mile long, and about a mile and a half broad. It is bounded on the north by Carnbee, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Pittenweem, and on the west by Elie and Kilconquhar. There is a small harbour attached to it, which at one period ranked amongst the most considerable fishing stations on the coast of Fife, and its inhabitants still pursue that avocation. St. Monance is a burgh of barony, governed by two bailies, a treasurer, a provost, and twelve councillors. From the adjacent country its little church alone is visible, standing on the height above the houses, and so near to the sea as to be occasionally wet with its foam; it is a curious old Gothic edifice. Until the year 1646, the name of the parish was Abercrombie, or Invernie; its present name is derived from Saint Monan, a martyr celebrated for his miracles in Fife and the adjacent ISLE OF MAY. The railway station is adjoining the village on the East of Fife branch of the North British line. Acreage, 1,203. Population in 1881, 2,054

CARNBEE is a parish situate 3 miles from Pittenweem, its post town, entirely inland, containing the villages of ARNCROACH and OVENSTONE. Its length and breadth are each about four miles. It is bounded on the north by Cameron, on the south by Pittenweem, on the east by Crail and Kilrenny, and on the west by Kilconquhar. A ridge of hills runs through the centre of it, the highest of which is Kellie Law, having an altitude of 800 feet above the level of the sea. Kellie Castle, formerly the seat of the Earls of Kellie, stands in this parish, on the south side of Kellie Law, and occupies a prominent and beautiful situation. The minerals are limestone and freestone. The greater part of the land is rich and fertile, and well cultivated, the rest being adapted for pasture. There are a parish church and school at Carnbee, and a Free church and school at Arncroach. The nearest railway station is at Pittenweem. Acreage, 8,396. Population in 1881, 1,057.

ST. ANDREWS,

WITH THE PARISHES OF DENINO, CAMERON, ST. LEONARDS, AND LEUCHARS.

ST. ANDREWS is a city, a royal burgh, and seaport, and perhaps the most interesting town, as regards its ecclesiastical history, in North Britain, 39 N.N.E. from Edinburgh, 10 E. from Cupar, 10 N. from Anstruther, and the same distance N.W. from Crail, and stands within the bay to which it gives its name, wherein flow the Eden and a small stream called the Kinness. Its history is mingled with the civil and ecclesiastical annals of Scotland, especially the latter; but the narrow space within which the proprietor of this work is confined in the descriptive notice of towns denies to him the gratifying task of performing that ample justice to those subjects which their importance demands, and which has been so ably and so elaborately treated by the authors of the "Gazetteer of Scotland."

The city of St. Andrews in 1410 first saw the establishment of its university, which was the earliest of the kind in Scotland, having originated with Bishop Wardlaw, a magnificent and liberal minded prelate; in 1411 it was endowed by charter. The college of St. Salvator was erected by Bishop Kennedy in 1455, that of St. Leonard in 1512, and that of St. Mary, or the divinity college, in 1537; in 1747 the institutions of St. Salvator and St. Leonard were united by parliamentary statute. The university library contains upwards of 100,000 volumes. The united college has a principal, with professers of Greek, logic, natural philosophy, moral philosophy, humanity, mathematics, natural history, anatomy and education. The college of St. Mary is an institution of less consequence, and consists of a principal, and professors of divinity, biblical criticism, church history and Oriental languages. The site of the Madras college is on the south side of South street, immediately behind and comprehending within it part of that fine old ruin of the Black Friars, which will thus be associated with an improved system of education for centuries to come—uniting tastefully and appropriately something of the splendour of departed with much of the elegance and usefulness of present times. This noble institution, which was endowed by the late Dr. Bell, the distinguished founder of several similar establishments both in this and in other towns in Scotland, cannot fail to secure to his memory, for ages to come, that veneration and esteem to which, as a benefactor of his race, he is so well entitled. The foundation stone was laid on the 9th April, 1832. Under the plan lately formulated by the Endowed Schools Commissioners for Scotland, this institution is now converted into a school for secondary education only, instead of the original arrangement, which included both the primary and secondary departments.

The town originally consisted of four streets; Swallow street (which has for centuries disappeared), towards the sea; North street, in which a number of elegant edifices are now situated, together with the buildings of the united college, partly old and partly new; Market street, which runs through the middle of the town; South street, which is spacious, well paved, and lined with lime trees on both sides, terminates towards the east in a beautiful view of the ruins of the cathedral, and towards the west in a fine arched entrance, being the old city gate. The streets all concentrate towards the old cathedral, and the still more ancient tower of St. Regulus, or, as it is more commonly called, "The Square Tower." In this quarter still stands a great part of the magnificent wall reared by Prior John Hepburn, in 1516; it runs along the south-east side of the town, and contains fourteen round and square towers, each having a niche on the outside for a saint, and appears one of the most interesting relics in the place. From the top of St. Regulus' tower, 135 feet in height, there is a beautiful view of the Bell rock, the bay, the city and the surrounding country. The ruins, rapidly decreasing, of the once formidable castle, commonly supposed to be the scene of Cardinal Beaton's cruelty to others, and of his own assassination, lie towards the north-east, and jut out into the sea. On the shore to the westward, is a small eminence called the Witch Hill, the place where those convicted of witchcraft suffered. Near this spot is a monument raised in 1842 to the memory of the martyrs—Wishart, Mill, and others. It is in the form of an obelisk, and is forty-five feet in height.

As before stated, St. Andrews is a royal burgh, by virtue of a charter conferred by David I., which was confirmed by Malcolm II., the unfortunate monarch who was slain in Glamis castle in 1034; the charter, together with the silver keys of the city, and the axe which was used for the decapitation of Sir Robert Spottiswoode and some other royalists are still to be seen in the town clerk's office. The city is governed by a provost, a dean of guild and four bailies, twenty-two councillors, and a treasurer. The burgh unites with Cupar, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny, Pittenweem, and Crail in sending one member to the Imperial Parliament. The present representative is Henry T. Anstruther, Esq. St. Andrews enjoyed at one period an extensive foreign trade, and so lately as the reign of Charles I. it owned from thirty to forty trading vessels. The harbour is not large, but it is safe when reached; its most dangerous wind is from the north-east. The export traffic is chiefly in potatoes and grain, and the import in coals, pavement, timber, &c. Four banking establishments are in operation here, namely—branches respectively of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Bank of Scotland, also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank. There are seven principal hotels, viz.:—the Royal, in South street; the Star and the Cross Keys, in Market street; Rusack's Marine Hotel, a handsome new building, charmingly situated on the south of the Links and facing the sea; the Imperial Hotel (lately enlarged and improved), in North street and Murray Park; the Alexandra Hotel, in Alexandra place, and the St. Regulus Hotel, in Queen street. Its railway facilities have in recent years been very much improved. It is connected with the main line from Edinburgh to Dundee and the north, via the new Tay Bridge, by a junction at Leuchars, 6 miles distant. A new line connecting St. Andrews with the burghs of Anstruther, Crail, Pittenweem and other towns on the south Fifeshire coast, joining the main line to Edinburgh at Thornton Junction was opened in June, 1887.

Nearly opposite St. Mary's College, on the north side of the street, stands the town church, originally built by Bishop Turgot, in 1112, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It was in this church that John Knox preached his famous sermon which led to the destruction of the cathedral and monastic buildings. It is a large but inconvenient edifice about 150 feet long by 60 feet wide. The present building was erected in 1800 upon the foundations of the old one, and the interior of late has been very much improved. Within the door, and on the right side, is the superb monument to Archbishop Sharp, erected by his son in 1679. It is comprised of white marble; the figure of the prelate is represented in the attitude of kneeling, and below is exhibited, in relief, the assassination of this ecclesiastical dignitary. It was thoroughly repaired in 1850, at an expense of about £100. Besides the two parish churches, an additional one has been erected. There are also Free, Episcopal, and United Presbyterian churches, and Baptist, Independent, and Roman Catholic chapels. Golf, one of the national games of Scotland, has its stronghold in St. Andrews, the Royal and Ancient Golf Club having been established in 1754; the Queen is patroness, and it numbers upwards of 800 noblemen and gentlemen as its present members; they hold two great meetings annually. St. Andrews, whether as regards its early importance in the history of Scotland, with which it is so intimately associated—its numerous relics of antiquity, which everywhere arrest the eye; its venerable religious edifices, and its seminaries of learning—must be admitted to be a place possessing undying excellence to the mind of the antiquary, and replete with interest to the well-informed historian, the contemplative tourist, and the casual visitor. A hospital, the gift of the late William Gibson, for aged, infirm and sick persons, has been erected in Argyle street, at a cost of £4,000, and was opened in January, 1884. There are three public halls—viz., the Town Hall, in South street; the City Hall, in Church square; and the Lawn Tennis and Recreation Hall, in Alfred place, the last-named and the Town Hall being large structures, suitable for entertainments and public meetings. DENHEAD, a small village, is partly in this parish and that of Cameron. BOARHILLS, KINCAPLE, and STRATHKINNESS are also small villages distant about 4 miles from and in the parish of St. Andrews. The market is held on Monday, and the fairs (for cattle and hiring) on the second Tuesday in August and the first Monday after the 10th of November. The entire parish of St. Andrews embraces 11,482 statute acres, and in 1871 had a population of 7,851, and in 1881, 7,835, of which number the town contained 6,458.

ST. LEONARDS is a small parish so intersected by that of St. Andrews that it is identical in all its interests. It consists of detached portions in and around the city, and is surrounded by the parishes of Kingsbarns, Crail, and Denino, and is connected both historically and politically with the city and parish of St. Andrews. Its area is about 1,008 acres, and its population in 1881 was 769.

CAMERON parish is situate about three miles S. of St. Andrews. It is bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Carnbee and Kilconquhar, on the east by Denino, and on the west by Ceres. Its length is about six mile, and its breadth four miles, comprising an acreage of 9,325. The greater portion of the land is well cultivated, the remainder being pasture, well drained by numerous small streams. The nearest railway station is at Boarhills. There is a parish church and school at CAMERON, and a United Presbyterian church at LATHONES, and a Board school at RADERNIE, which are small places in the parish. DENHEAD is a small village, a portion of which is in this parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,003.

DENINO, or as it is sometimes spelt Dunino, is situated 4 miles S. of St. Andrews, bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Crail and Carnbee, on the east by Kinghorn, and on the west by Cameron. It is 3 miles long and about the same in breadth. The land is highly cultivated, and is intersected by woodlands and streams. The parish church is a stone building in the Gothic style of architecture, erected in 1826. Acreage, 2,787. Population in 1881, 297.

LEUCHARS parish is 9 miles in length by 5 in breadth, and contains an area of 13,354 acres. It is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, by the parishes of St. Andrews and Kemback on the south, by Dairsie and Logie on the west, and by Forgan and Ferry-Port-on-Craig on the north. The small rivulets or burns of Mobray and Moonzie fall into the Aden near the small village of Seggie; the former of these streams divides the parish into two portions. The surface is level and the soil tolerablyfertile. The village of Leuchars is pleasantly situated about a mile from the coast, and 6 N. W. from St. Andrews, on the road from that town to Dundee. The Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British railway passes through the parish, and there is a station in the village, and another at Leuchars Junction, about half a mile distant. The church is very ancient, and considered one of the most perfect specimens of Saxon architecture in Scotland; it is supposed to have been erected in the the twelfth century. There is also a Free church in the parish. GUARD BRIDGE is partly in this parish and partly in that of St. Andrews; the Guard Bridge Paper Co. Limited have extensive works here. SEGGIE and BALMULLO are small villages also in this parish, which in 1881 possessed a population numbering 2,185.

STRATHMIGLO

IS a parish and a small town—the latter nearly 2 miles S.W. from Auchtermuchty, and 8 N.E. from Kinross, and is a station on the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British railway, which runs close by the the town, distant about seven miles from Ladybank Junction on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch, and about seven miles by road, situated in a pleasant plain, and on the north bank of the Miglo or Eden; it consists chiefly of two streets, with several lanes diverging from them. The town house stands about the centre of the principal street; it has a square steeple, at the top of which is a balcony surrounded by balustrades, the whole being surmounted by a spire nearly eighty feet high. From the front of the steeple projects a stone pillar which formerly served as a sun dial, now much defaced; above this are the arms of the house of Burleigh. By charter in 1600, the detached portions of Feus were erected into a burgh of barony, and this grant was confirmed by James VI., in 1605, but the nomination of bailies and admittance of burgesses was vested in the person of the superior. On the opposite side of the Miglo is the village of the FEUS OF CASH, and between the old town and this village is a level meadow called Town-green, intersected by the Miglo, and belonging to the burgh. The manufacture of linen is carried on to a limited extent, and there is a bleach works. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and two Free churches. The first mentioned is a plain building standing at the entrance of the town. A fair is held at Strathmiglo on the last Friday in June. The parish of Strathmiglo, which embraces an area of 9,024 acres, had in 1881, a population of 2,061.

GATESIDE is a village in the parish of Strathmiglo, distant 2 miles W. therefrom, and contains a United Presbyterian church and a Board school.

TAYPORT,

WITH THE PARISH OF FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG.

TAYPORT, which was made into a burgh in 1887, is a small town in the parish of Ferry-Port-on-Craig, situated at the base of the hill opposite to Broughty Ferry, from which place it is distant about 2 miles S. across the river, 11 N. from Cupar, and 5 S.E. from Dundee. Previous to the construction of the railway, this place was identical in name with the parish, since which time it has taken the more appropriate name which it now bears. There is now railway communication between Tayport and Dundee by the new Tay Bridge, also with Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the South. For facilitating the shipping of goods, the railway company have constructed a dock and thrown out a pier, which can be approached by the steamers at all times of the tide. Many houses and villas have been erected on the slopes of the Tay, commanding a fine prospect of the opposite shore, Broughty Ferry and Dundee. There are three factories here for the spinning of yarns, and the manufacture of linen and jute goods, which provide employment for many of the inhabitants. The North of Scotland Bank, Limited, has a branch here. The salmon fishery, which is co-extensive with the parish along the coast, is actively pursued during the season, the fish being mostly sent to the London market; mussel dredging is also carried on extensively in the season. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a Baptist chapel. There is also a Board school, erected to accommodate about 600 scholars.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG is a parish five miles in length and from half a mile to a mile in breadth, stretching along the south margin of the Tay to its mouth where it empties itself into the German Ocean. The land rises to a hilly range extending westwards. It is bounded on the south by the parishes of Forgan and Leuchars, and on the north by the river Tay. The local situation of the parish naturally accounts for its name, situated as it is on a rock or Craig, and was formerly a ferry for the conveyance of passengers, horses, and cattle, so that this was literally a Ferry, whose port was on a Craig (or Crag)—hence the name; but now the steamers have long since abolished this mode of conveyance. The estate of Scotscraig, which comprises the whole parish, was formerly the property of Archbishop Sharp, of St. Andrew's. The present mansion house was built in 1807, and is a neat and substantial building, situated amidst some fine plantations and well laid out grounds. The parish church, which is conveniently situated in the village of Tayport, where most of the inhabitants reside, is an old edifice, rebuilt in 1825, and at present is in a good state of preservation. In the immediate vicinity is a Board school. This parish, which embraces an area of 2,758 acres, in 1881 had a population of 2,818, the town at the same period containing 2,630.

POST OFFICE, Castle Street, Catherine Christie, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from Dundee, the North, and all parts at 7 and 10 a.m. and 6 p.m., and are despatched at 9 30 a.m. and 3 15 and 6 20 p.m.; from Edinburgh, the South, and all parts at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., and are despatched at 6 and 2 45 and 3 15 p.m.——Money Order and Post Office and Savings Bank.

TORRYBURN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CARNOCK AND SALINE, AND THE VILLAGES OF OAKLEY, CAIRNEYHILL, AND LOW TORRY.

TORRYBURN is a parish and village, the latter 17 miles S.W. from Kirkcaldy, 6 E. from Kincardine, 4½ W. from Dunfermline, its post town, and 2 E. from Culross; seated on Crombie point, a promontory on the Firth, and two miles and a half from the Oakley station on the North British Railway. The surface of this parish is beautifully diversified, and the high grounds command fine views of the Firth of Forth and the Lothians. The situation of the village is pleasant and salubrious. The inhabitants at one time were chiefly employed in weaving, but this branch of industry has become extinct, and very little trade is now carried on. Some of the females are engaged in embroidering sewed muslins. From the rocky state of the shore it has been found impossible to form a harbour here; but a pier is situated at Crombie point, where steamers can land goods and passengers. The collieries of the Coltness Iron Co. Limited, situated at East Grange in this parish, find employment for most of the inhabitants. The parish lies in the south-west corner of the county, and extends along the shore of the Firth of Forth, between the parish of Dunfermline on the east and that of Culross on the west, and measures from four to five miles in length by about two in breadth. The parish, which is formed by the union of the baronies of Torry and Crombie, derives its name from the Gaelic word Torry, signifying the "King's Height," and burn, the Scottish term for rivulet. Within the boundary of the parish and adjacent to Torryburn village is that of LOW TORRY. It is a very pretty village, having Torry Bay in front, with comparatively high back grounds protecting it from the northern blasts of winter. The principal estates in this parish are Craigflower, Torry, and Inzievar. Dunimarle estate is also adjacent. It possesses beautiful grounds and a museum, both of which are open to the public. The places of worship are the the Established and Free churches, and there is a Board school. A fair is held at Torryburn on the second Wednesday in July. Acreage of the parish 3,994. Population in 1881, 737.

CARNOCK parish lies to the west of Dunfermline, its post town, from which it is four miles distant, and north of Torryburn, which parishes separate it from the Firth of Forth. Like other parts of the country in this quarter, the ground is swelling and hilly, but very fertile, and in a high state of cultivation, the scenery in several parts being of a pleasing nature. Coal is abundant. No business of any consequence is carried on. A church of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship, and there is also a Board school. Acreage of the parish 3,492. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,055.

OAKLEY and CAIRNEYHILL are two villages in the parish of Carnock —the first-named, which is about a mile from Carnock village, and five miles from Dunfermline, its post town, sprung into existence since the year 1846, owing to the establishment of the Forth Iron Works. These works have since been discontinued. At Oakley there is a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline branch of the North British Railway. CAIRNEYHILL village is situated on the road between Alloa and Dunfermline, three miles west of the latter town; the majority of the inhabitants are employed by the manufacturers of that place. At Cairneyhill are a United Presbyterian church and a Board school. Population in 1881: Oakley, 312; Cairneyhill, 325.

SALINE is a parish and village, the latter two miles and a half north from Oakley and six north-west from Dunfermline, its post town; the parish, which extends to the borders of Perth and Clackmannanshire, is about five miles in length and four in breadth, and contains 8,189 acres. The principal pursuit of the inhabitants is agriculture. The places of worship are an Established church and a Free church, both in the village, and there is also a Board school. Population in 1881, 954.

WEMYSS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF EAST AND WEST WEMYSS, BUCKHAVEN, AND METHIL.

WEMYSS is a parish on the south-east side of the county, and derives its name from the Celtic word Wamb, signifying caves. The parish is bounded on the north by Kennoway and Markinch, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Scoonie, and on the west by Dysart. Its length is six miles east to west, and one mile and a half in breadth, the area being 4,732 acres. Within the parish is the ancient castle of Macduff, now a ruin. This massive structure crowns a height above the shore, to the east of East Wemyss commanding a most extensive view seaward. Near Macduff's Castle are several extensive excavations at the base of the bank, which have evidently been formed by the action of the sea at a very remote period; one of these caves is called the "King's Cave," from the tradition that James V., in one of his frolics, joined an encampment of gipsies here. Some years ago Sir James Simpson discovered sculptorings on some of the walls of these caves of various animals and peculiar symbols, common on large stones in the north and east of Scotland, understood by archæologists to be of great antiquity. In a paper read before the Royal Society of Edinburgh he described these figures as met with in no other caves but those of Wemyss. The formation of the caves themselves is a most singular result of the extraordinary force of the sea rolling in upon this part of the Fife coast from the German Ocean. The sea has washed with great force the high rocks at this point, but their soft material, consisting of the new red sandstone, admitted of that scooping out by the force of the tides which had formed the caves. One of them, immediately under Macduff's Castle, is so narrow at the mouth that it is difficult to enter, but it expands so as easily to contain a hundred persons. Another near is about fifty feet in height, and formed like a fine cupola. A third, still larger, between East and West Wemyss, termed the Glass cave, was used at the end of last century for the manufacture of glass from kelp formed from the sea weed. The land generally is in an excellent state of cultivation. The minerals are ochre, ironstone, and coal, the latter being very considerable and extensively wrought. A large portion of the Wemyss estate consists of coal seams of various depths, which have been increasingly wrought of late years; and a very large quantity of coal is yet unexcavated. In West Wemyss the coal trade has considerably increased, and new pits have been opened at Muiredge, near Buckhaven, and Methil hill, where Methil harbour affords a good export. The railway trunk line skirts this parish to the west, and a branch runs along its northern border eastward to Leven. There is now a branch line from Thornton Junction running through the parish to Buckhaven and Methil. Population of the parish in 1881, 7,307.

EAST WEMYSS is a village in the parish of Wemyss, one mile east from West Wemyss, five from Kirkcaldy, and three from Dysart, situated on the Firth of Forth. In this village the manufacture of linen fabrics is carried on extensively, the factory of Messrs. G. & J. Johnston containing between two and three hundred power looms; a brewery and a malting house are the other branches of business. There are Free and Established churches in the village; also public and Free Church schools. Population in 1881, 846.

WEST WEMYSS is a village, a mile west from East Wemyss, 4 east from Kirkcaldy, 5 West from Leven, and 2 from Dysart; it is in the parish of Wemyss, and is a burgh of barony, governed by two bailies, twelve councillors, and a treasurer. The harbour is situated at its western extremity, and has several vessels belonging to it employed in the exportation of coal, which is wrought close to the harbour. A short distance east of the village, on the brink or face of an eminence, and surrounded on the land side by beautiful plantations and pleasure grounds, is Wemyss Castle, the seat of Randolph Gordon Erskine Wemyss, Esq., who is the sole proprietor of the parish, and the representative of the oldest family in the county. The lands now forming the parish of Wemyss are said to have been part of the estate of Macduff, Shakspere's well-known "Thane of Fife."

The Established church is the only place of worship. There is also a school here. Population in 1881, 1,206

BUCKHAVEN is a village, one mile east from and in the parish of Wemyss. There is a harbour here for the accommodation of boats engaged in the fishing station, which is considerable on this coast. The manufacture of fishing nets is carried on here to a large extent, and coal is also extensively worked in the neighbourhood. Both villages are noted for their brisk pursuit of the fishing trade. There is a Free church, and two for the United Presbyterians, and a large public school in the village.

METHIL, which is a village in the parish of Wemyss, is one mile east from Buckhaven. The new dock at Methill, opened 5th May, 1887, is the property of Randolph Gordon Erskine Wemyss, Esq., of Wemyss Castle, and has greatly added to the prosperity of the district, large quantities of coal from the neighbouring collieries being shipped here. The dock has an area of 4¾ acres, with width at entrance of 50 feet, and a depth of water at ordinary spring tides of 23 feet, and at neaps of 19 feet. It is fitted with three of Sir William Armstrong & Co.'s hydraulic hoists, each capable of loading a vessel with 2,500 tons of coal in 24 hours. There are also hydraulic cranes for working other import and export goods. The dock is connected with the main railway system of Fifeshire, and is in direct communication with all the Fife collieries, and is brilliantly lighted by electricity. There is an Established church here. A fair is held at Wemyss on the second Wednesday in September. Population in 1881, 2,952.

FORFARSHIRE,

OR ANGUS.—This county is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, on the west by Perthshire, and on the north by the counties of Aberdeen and Kincardine, the latter lying also on its north-eastern verge: on the south the Frith of Tay is its boundary, as likewise is Perthshire for a short distance; its extent from north to south is about thirty-eight miles, and from east to west thirty-six. The figure of this county is, perhaps, the most uniform of any in Scotland; and but for an indentation on its western side, caused by the intrusion of a part of Perthshire, it would describe almost a perfect square. The contents of its area have been variously estimated; it is stated to contain 890 square miles, or 569,840 statute acres; of these there are about three hundred thousand cultivated, and two hundred and sixty thousand uncultivated; the portion occupied by the lakes is inconsiderable. In size Forfarshire is classed as the twelfth, and in population as the fourth of the Scottish counties.

EARLY HISTORY.—The district of ANGUS (now Forfarshire), with the contiguous county of Kincardine on the north, anciently formed the country of the Horesti, and a portion of the Pictish kingdom. On the dissolution of that government by Kenneth II., about the end of the ninth century, he is said to have divided it between his two brothers, Angus and Mearns, from whom the two counties derived their appellation. The district gave the title of Earl to two different families; on the extinction of the first, the earldom was conferred on a relation of King David Bruce, and in 1477 it merged in the family of the Douglases; it has since devolved on the Duke of Hamilton. There are a number of old ruinous castles in this county, most of which have fallen to decay, in consequence of the baronies on which they stand having passed into the hands of the proprietors of other estates.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND PRODUCE.—The great level valley of Strathmore runs through the centre of the county from east to west, and the lines of hills which flank this extensive and fine tract of country, with the Grampians on the north, and some minor ranges on the south, may be said to form this district into a series of continuous ridges, generally pursuing a direction from west to east, interrupted occasionally by the different rivers and streams coursing to the sea. The eminences of greatest altitude in the shire are—Hill of Dundee, 525 feet; Dunnichen Hill, 720; Belmont, 759; Sidlaw, 1,406; Craigowl, 1,609; Oathlaw, one of the Grampians, 2,264; and Mount-Battock, 3,465 feet above the level of the sea. The portion of the Grampian mountains in this shire is diversified by many beautiful valleys, and from the summit of these elevations to the ocean on the east, and the Tay on the south, the surface of the land may be considered an inclined plain. From the aerial region of the highest Grampian, an extensive and well varied prospect is presented, not only of almost the whole country adjoining the Tay and of the ocean, but of the eastern part of the peninsula of Fife, the coast of East Lothian, and the heights of Lammermoor. The capabilities of Forfarshire for agriculture continued for centuries in that dormant state which characterised most parts of Scotland, but it cannot escape observation, at the present day, that this district is completely emancipated from the reproach of inattention to husbandry; it now exhibits a lively spirit and practically enlightened system of farming, and consequently a just appreciation of the advantages of this most useful of all sciences. Within the last eighty years the farmers of this county have kept at least equal pace in the improvements adopted with those of similarly situated divisions of the country; and the wealth of Forfarshire has been steadily increasing both from its agriculture and its manufacturing products. The general drainage of the land has been proceeded in to a great and beneficial extent; and several lochs, particularly that of Rescobie, have been drawn off for the purpose of obtaining shell-marl, which has long been in high repute with the agriculturists in their respective neighbourhoods; the introduction of bone manure has been followed by the most gratifying results. The sowing of permanent pasture grasses and turnips is persevered in to a broad and lucrative amount; and the quantity of ground appropriated to tillage is annually augmenting. Wheat and beans are also grown, but only in the more favoured localities. The improvement of live stock has been in proportionate advance with that of cultivation, and has been materially facilitated by the zealous co-operation of the various agricultural societies. The polled black Angus cattle, now less common than at one time, have given place to other breeds, and many young and lean cattle are imported from Ireland. Numbers of black-faced sheep are reared on the hills. In traversing the lower parts of the shire, beautiful enclosures and plantations meet the eye in every parish; and by the formation of excellent roads in all directions, a pleasing inducement is now held for travelling through this progressively prosperous county. The planting of waste lands seems to have made very little progress till about the middle of the last century, and when, at length, this sure source of future profit suggested itself, Scotch firs were the only sort of trees planted in such situations. More recent planters introduced the larch as a more valuable species of timber, and adapted, as they thought, to every variety of soil and situation; but experience has exploded this latter notion, for it has been profitably proved that by the operation of draining, the moors and waste lands produce excellent oak and beech, of which a number of proprietors have planted extensively. From the mouth of the Tay to near the Westhaven the coast is sandy, having, from thence eastward, many sunken rocks. Within a mile to the east of Arbroath the shore becomes bold and rocky, presenting dreadful precipices to the sea, perforated with caverns by the incessant and insidious workings of the waves; the "Redhead," a promontory upwards of two hundred feet in perpendicular height, is the most striking feature of this rocky front; it forms the south point of Lunan Bay, and exposes a beautiful beach to the ocean for nearly three miles. The fisheries of Forfarshire are of great importance, those of the North and South Esk, and the coast of the county, are at the present time very valuable; and the mode of packing salmon in ice, for the London market, is a practice which has proved of peculiar advantage to those connected with that branch of the fishery. Haddock, cod, ling, soles, halibut, turbot, &c. are also caught, and during July and August the fishermen are engaged in fishing for herring, of which large numbers are taken on the north-east coast.

MANUFACTURES AND MINERALS.—The manufactures of Forfar are of very high consequence; and as Fifeshire is celebrated for the production of the finer linen fabric, so is this county noted for the manufacture of the coarse hempen goods, wrought up from foreign materials; the spinning of yarn in large mills is carried on very extensively. Dundee, Arbroath and Montrose are its principal trading ports; the two first-named enjoy pre-eminence in the making of sailcloths, Osnaburgs, sacking, dowlases, and other linen textures; Brechin participates largely with other places in the preparation of flax; and the towns of Forfar, Montrose and Kirriemuir are seats of material manufacturing importance. Exclusive of these particular stations, the inhabitants of all the little towns and villages are industriously employed in weaving the already prepared materials into cloth, and in the process of bleaching. Besides the branches above mentioned, there are also many engineering works, breweries, tanneries, paper works, distilleries and starch and tobacco manufactories. This county is not distinguished for its mineral treasures. Of limestone, which is found in various parts, there are immense tracts in the Grampians; but from the expense of conveying coal to burn it, this natural product, so valuable under other circumstances, is wrought but to a limited extent, and principally in the neighbourhood of Montrose. Freestone is plentiful in almost every parish; the colour is various, but in no instance so white and beautiful as the stone of Fife or Mid-Lothian. The Arbroath paving stone is well known, and has a ready sale in London and Edinburgh. Lead has been found in several places, and was at one time wrought to a limited extent in the parish of Lochlee. But, unfortunately for its local interests, this county is destitute of coal—at least no vestige of this invaluable fossil has yet been discovered; the whole district, therefore, is dependent on the Fife and Newcastle collieries for this essential article of domestic comfort and manufacturing facility. Borings for this fuel have at different times been made, but without success.

RIVERS, LOCHS AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers are the North and South Esk, which rise near each other on the northern confines of the county; the former originates in Loch Lee, which is filled by the water of the Lee, after being joined by the Unich, which latter forms several beautiful cascades. The tributaries of the North Esk are the Luther, the Cruick, the West Water, the Tarf, and the Mark; enriched with these streams it falls into the sea three miles from Montrose. The South Esk passes through the centre of the county, receiving in it progress the contributary waters of the Noran, the Lemno, the Carity, and the Prosen, and enters the ocean at Montrose. The third river in point of size is the Isla, which rises near the source of the Esks; it receives, near Meigle, the Dean, the Carleet a little above Glamis, and the romantic burn of Glamis near the Castle; and, turning westward into Perthshire, it joins the Tay at Kinclaven. There are also two lesser rivers, the Dighty and the Lunan. The former proceeds from some small lakes in the parish of Lundie, and falls into the mouth of the Tay, east from Broughty Ferry; the latter conveys the waters of the lakes of Rescobie and Belgavies to the sea at Lunan Bay. The Lunan is famous for its eels, and the other rivers abound with different varieties of the trout and salmon. In the enumeration of rivers yielding wealth to this county, the Tay must not be omitted—though this district cannot claim its origin—being far the most valuable from its adaptation to the purposes of commerce. It has its source in the western extremity of Perthshire, and, after winding through delightful scenery, the beauties of which are heightened by its sparkling waters, it becomes an estuary or firth, and about eight miles below Dundee it expands into the bay of St. Andrews, and loses its distinction in the wide reservoir of the German Ocean. The lakes of most consequence are Loch Lee, in the parish of its name; Loch Brandy, in the parish of Clova; the Loch of Forfar, near that town; the Lochs of Rescobie and Lintrathen, in the respective parishes so denominated; and of Belgavies, in the parish of Aberlemno. None of these are of great magnitude—indeed few, if any, are more than a mile in extent, and there is nothing peculiar in their qualities or situations. Forfarshire is included in an extensive line of railway communication, and it may be said that every town of note in this shire is visited by a main line or branch from it.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &C.—Forfarshire comprises fifty-two complete parishes and four parts of parishes, in which are five royal and parliamentary burghs, namely, Dundee, Arbroath, Montrose, Brechin, and Forfar; the four last named burghs, with Bervie (in Kincardineshire), unite in sending one member to the Senate. Dundee, recently raised to the dignity of a city by royal charter, also returns two, and the county one; the gentleman sitting for the latter being James W. Barclay, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1888-89 is 11,340. The lord lieutenant is the Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorne. By the returns presented to the Government in 1871, the county contained 106,324 males and 131,243 females; total, 237,567. In 1881 the numbers were: males, 120,091; females, 146,269; total, 266,360, showing an increase in the ten years of 28,793 persons. The valuation of the county for 1888-89 is £505,406; railways, £53,278; waterworks, £25,462; total, £584,146.

ARBROATH,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF ST. VIGEANS, ARBIRLOT, MARYWELL, AUCHMITHIE, AND COLLISTON.

ARBROATH, formerly called Aberbrothock, is a royal burgh, a seaport, and the seat of a presbytery, 60 miles N.N.E. from Edinburgh, 17 N.E. from Dundee, 15 S.E. from Forfar, and 12 S. from Montrose, situated on a small plain, on the coast of the German Ocean, and surrounded on the north-west and east by eminences, in an amphitheatric form. About a mile north-east, but locally in the parish of St. Vigeans, the coast becomes very bold, rocky, and perpendicular. In the face of these cliffs are a number of caves and arches perforated by the action of the waves. They are a great attraction to visitors, having been rendered famous by Sir Walter Scott in his "Antiquary." This is a town of early origin, owing its rise to an important monastic institution, founded here by William the Lion, about the year 1178. The remains of this edifice are strikingly picturesque, and consist of ruinous towers of the most solid construction, columns overthrown and broken in pieces, Gothic windows, cloisters, staircases, &c., all exhibiting the ravages of time. The church of this abbey has been a most magnificent fabric; a part of the abbot's lodgings, which stands a little distance from the church, still remains. The monks first came from Kelso, and Reginaldus (a monk of Tyron), was its first abbot. It was very extensively endowed with lands and other gifts by Kings William I., Alexander II., and Robert I., and their nobility. It possessed forty-six parish churches, and extensive lands in several counties, particularly in the North of Scotland, with privileges of regality, &c. The abbots of this foundation had privileges which others did not enjoy —they were exempt from assisting at the yearly synods, and had the distinction of making use of and wearing the pontifical ornaments. King John conferred on the inhabitants of the place the same privileges that his subjects enjoyed throughout all England, except in his city of London. The town is situated on both banks of the river Brothock, and in the parishes of Arbroath and St. Vigeans. It contains several elegant streets, the principal business street being the High street, with churches, flax mills, and numerous factories. In 1812 a town house was erected, and in 1855, at the rear of it in an open space, a very handsome and commodious market house was built by the magistrates and town council, at an outlay of about £7,000. These, together with several other buildings, numerous new churches and other places of worship, add much to the appearance of the town. The streets have also been greatly improved, by superior paving and sewerage, and by the addition of elegantly fitted and well supplied shops.

At the commencement of the eighteenth century, Arbroath had but little trade, nor did it claim any notice as a place of manufacture. Nothing was then directly imported, except a small cargo of wood occasionally from Norway; flax, iron, and other useful commodities were purchased from the merchants in Dundee and Montrose. About the year 1738, the manufacture of coarse linens was introduced by the following accident:—A weaver in the town having a small quantity of flax unfit for the kind of cloth then usually brought to market, made it into a web, and offered it to another of the inhabitants at a price by which he was willing to be the loser; the purchaser, who had previously been in Germany, remarked a similarity between this piece of cloth and the manufacture of Osnaburgh, and prevailed upon the weaver to make a trial of other webs of the same texture; the experiment succeeded—a company was established, and other parts of the county soon availed themselves of the discovery. The staple trade of Arbroath at the present day is the manufacture of sail cloth and other coarse linens, the preparation and spinning of the yarns of these productions of the loom is carried on extensively, and chiefly by steam power, by many firms and individuals of the first respectability. Jute spinning has also been introduced, but as yet it is of small extent compared with flax spinning. The staple manufacture has been much developed during the last twenty years. In addition to the linen trade there are various concerns of magnitude, including engineering works, iron foundries, a ship building yard (with a patent slip), extensive tanneries, roperies, &c. and a good trade exists in the exportation of grain and potatoes. Considerable improvements have been made on one harbour, the principal being the conversion of the inner harbour into a wet dock. For these works a loan of £20,000 was obtained from Government, but much more than that sum was expended. As a result of this improvement, a large class of vessels, including steamers, are frequently in port. There is a neat signal tower for communication with the Bell (or Inch Cape) Rock, rising from the German Ocean, about twelve miles in a south-easterly direction from Arbroath. Of this rock, and the tradition attached to it, a most entertaining account will be found in Chambers' "Gazetteer." On "the rock" is a lighthouse, the first stone of which was laid in July, 1808, and the beacon first loomed over the deep on the 1st of February, 1811. At the lighthouse there are a principal lightkeeper and three assistants; each in his turn goes on the shore at the expiration of every six weeks, with liberty to remain a fortnight. In the town buildings are erected, where each keeper has apartments for the accommodation of his family; and connected with the establishment is a very neat signal tower situated near the harbour. This structure, about eighty feet in height, is furnished with an excellent telescope; and signals are arranged with the persons at the lighthouse on the rock, by the lightkeeper on shore daily, at nine morning, weather permitting. There is an attendant vessel from Arboath engaged to and fro in the summer time in charge of a master, but in winter it is by steamer from Granton. The monetary transactions of the town are facilitated by five banking establishments—branches respectively of the British Linen Company, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Bank of Scotland, all accommodated in handsome buildings; there is also a bank for savings, well sustained by many provident depositors. There are numerous inns, and several newsrooms and libraries. A large public hall, with subsidiary rooms, &c., in the High street, was erected in 1866, by an incorporated company; and the parishes of Arbroath and Saint Vigeans have also erected a handsome combination poorhouse in an elevated and healthy suburb of the town.

Arbroath is a very ancient burgh of regality, being founded at the same time with the abbey. It was then made a free burgh, and ultimately a burgh royal by crown charter in 1599. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and twelve councillors, and it has six incorporated trades, viz., hammermen, glovers, shoemakers, weavers, tailors, and bakers, besides two incorporations of seamen and brewers, and the Guildry incorporation. It unites with Forfar, Montrose, Brechin and Inverbervie in sending one member to the Imperial Parliament, John S. Will, Esq., Q.C., being the present representative. Burgh, police and justice of the peace courts are held statedly in the police court once a week, or more frequently if necessary, and a sheriff's court for small debts, debts recovery and ordinary court every Wednesday, in Commerce street. There are more than twenty places of worship in the town and suburbs of Arbroath; their names, denominations and respective sites, with the ministers officiating, are given on a subsequent page. An elegant steeple, one hundred and fifty feet in height, was a number of years since, added to the parish church. There are several excellent public educational establishments in the town, including the Arbroath High School, and several large and elegant public schools recently erected by the Burgh School Board. The Arbroath Guide is the principal newspaper, and is conducted upon Liberal principles.

The local charities of the town include the Infirmary and Dispensary, a handsome stone building, situated on the high common, and two destitute sick societies; also nine mortifications, viz., Carmichael's, founded 1738, out of which the widows of seven shipmasters get a division half-yearly; Colvill's, founded 1812, out of which £60 annually is expended on the education of ten poor children; £10 to the Scotch Episcopal clergymen; £10 to the poor of Arbroath; the like sum to the poor of St. Vigeans, and the residue to twenty poor householders; Dove's, founded in 1841, for the education of "native born boys," of poor parentage; Mrs. Renny Strachan's, which amounts to £50 yearly, to be expended in purchasing coals and oat-meal for distribution at Christmas amongst the most necessitous poor. Forbes' Fund, founded 1864, from which sums of not less than £8 nor more than £10 yearly, given for the relief of destitute widows and old unmarried females in the town of Arbroath; Gibson Fund, founded 1868; annual produce of residue of trust estate of the late William Gibson, applied as follows:—£100 to the rector of the High School for the education of eight boys, and the remainder divided yearly in sums of not less than £20 and not more than £25 among poor householders of the town of Arbroath, preference being given to respectable worthy people of fallen fortunes; Gibson Christmas Charity, 1868, annual revenue of £2,000, applied one half in purchase of coals, other half in groceries, oatmeal and clothes for distribution among the necessitous poor of the town; Gibson mortification, 1868, annual revenue of a sum of £4,000, divided yearly among sixteen poor householders of the town; a fund supposed to amount to about £2,000, bequeathed in 1875, by Mr. William Petrie, manufacturer, to be distributed in £10 shares among "poor, deserving women of respectable character, being in and belonging to, and at the time resident in the parish of St. Vigeans, and who have not been in receipt of parochial relief for the preceding five years at least;" and Duncan Charity, 1869, annual profits of three-eighths of residue of the estate of the late David Duncan, for behoof of poor, aged and reduced persons, not being objects of parochial relief. The market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the last Saturday in January, for general business and hiring servants; on the first Saturday after Whit-Sunday for hiring; July 18th (if it fall on a Saturday, if not, on the following Saturday) for general business and hiring; and the first Saturday after Martinmas for hiring. By the census returns for 1871, the parliamentary burgh of Arbroath contained a population of 19,973, and in 1881, 21,758.

ST. VIGEANS is a parish, extending eight and a half miles from east to west by four and a half in breadth, and contains the small villages of ST. VIGEANS and MARYWELL, and the quoad sacra parishes of AUCHMITHIE and COLLISTON, or GOWAN BANK, also a part of the town of Arbroath. The first-named contains the parish church, situated about one mile from Arbroath, the others varying in distance from two to three and a half miles from the same town. The parish is bounded on the north and east by Inverkeilor, on the west by Arbroath, Arbirlot, and Carmylie, and on the south by the German Ocean. Originally, it included the parish of Arbroath, disjoined after the Reformation. It was itself formerly termed Aberbrothock, and now bears the name of a famous hermit who had his chapel and hermitage at the Grange of Conan, near to which was a baronial castle, named Gory, or Gregory. From Whiting Ness, and as far as Auchmithie, the coast is very rugged and precipitous (gradually rising to Dickmountlaw Hill, 250 feet above the sea level), containing a number of caves and arches, some of which may be passed through in boats and others on foot; they are a great attraction and much visited. The stream of the Brothock flows through the parish, and passes through the town of Arbroath, entering the sea at its harbour. The parish of St. Vigeans encloses an area of 12,731 acres; in 1871 it had a population of 12,805, and in 1881, 14,982.

ARBIRLOT parish is contiguous to that of St. Vigeans at Arbroath on the north, and bounded on the south-east by the German Ocean, extending four miles in length by three in breadth. The village is about three miles west of Arbroath, situated on the east bank of the Elliot stream, from whence the name is derived, which was formerly Aber elliot. Along the sea coast the land is sandy; inland the soil is a rich loam, capable of producing various crops. About a quarter of a mile south-west of the village stands Kelly Castle, which originally belonged to the family of Auchterlony, and now to the Earl of Dalhousie. Arbirlot contains an Established church and manse, a Free church and manse, erected at a cost of about £1,300, and a public school, Acreage, 6,747. Population in 1871, 919, and in 1881 822.

AUCHTERHOUSE,

WITH LUNDIE, FOWLIS EASTER, AND TEALING.

THE parish of AUCHTERHOUSE lies in the south-west corner of the county, about 7 miles N.W. from Dundee, its post town, and on the south of the Sidlaw hills, bounded on the east by Tealing, on the south-east by Mains and Strathmartine, on the south by Liff, on the west and south-west by Lundie and Fowlis, on the north-west by Newtyle, and on the north and north-east by Glamis, and is a station on the Dundee and Newtyle railway. There is a parish church (erected in 1775), also a Board school. The road from Dundee to Meigle (in Perthshire) passes through the parish, which comprises 5,708 acres, chiefly of arable land. Sandstone lies at or near the surface of almost the whole extent of the parish, which in 1881 contained a population of 661.

LUNDIE parish lies in the western part of the county, and at the head of the valley of the Dighty, bounded on the north by the Sidlaw hills, which divide it from Kettins and Newtyle, on the east by Auchterhouse, and on the south and west by Fowlis Easter; Admiral Lord Viscount Duncan, whose name is familiar to every reader of British history, lies interred in the churchyard of this parish. The parish of FOWLIS EASTER, in Perthshire, was united to Lundie ecclesiastically in 1618, but parochially is a separate parish. Its length is about 3 miles, and its breadth a mile and a half, commanding a beautiful view of the Carse of Gowrie, near the eastern extremity of which it lies, the Firth of Tay, and the opposite shores of Fife. In point of situation, and for natural, beauty and rich and varied scenery in every direction, few places can excel it. Conjointly the district forms a well-cultivated and productive tract of country, embellished with plantations and irrigated by several small lakes, of which Lundie Loch is one. The church of Fowlis, which was founded by Sir Andrew Gray, for a provost and some prebendaries, is still perfectly entire, although it was built in the year 1143. The parish, which comprises 7,012 acres, abounds in grey freestone of good quality, and in 1881 had a population of 628.

TEALING parish situated about 6 miles N. from Dundee, its post town, and lying on the south side of the Sidlaw chain, is about 6 miles in length and 3 in breadth. It is watered by the small river Fithie, a tributary stream to the Dighty, and is bounded on the east and west by Murroes and Auchterhouse, and a line drawn nearly along the summits of the hills above mentioned would divide the parish from Glamis on the north. In this parish are found grey slate, moorstone, and freestone. John Glass, founder of the sect appropriately designated "Glassites," was minister of Tealing anterior to his open separation from the Church of Scotland. The places of worship are the parish and a Free church, and there is also a Board school. Acreage of parish, 7,227; population in 1881, 757.

BRECHIN,

WITH THE PARISH OF FARNELL.

BRECHIN is a royal burgh the seat of a presbytery, the see of a bishop, and the capital of its parish; 70 miles N. from Edinburgh, situated on the north bank of the Southesk, and on a branch line of the North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway, for which there is a station here. Brechin more than once suffered by the incursions of invaders and broils of civil wars; it was burnt by the Danes in 1012, and in 1645 was subjected to a similar calamity by the Marquis of Montrose; two years afterwards it was nearly depopulated by that dreadful scourge, the plague. Formerly the city was walled, but the gates have been long removed, and in the present day it exhibits the appearance of a busy manufacturing town with several excellent public buildings. It has been greatly improved during the last few years, and is now well supplied with gas and water. Flax spinning and the manufacture of linen, and a paper mill, employ numerous hands. There are also two distilleries and a brewery. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, British Linen Company Bank, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and Bank of Scotland are established here. There are several excellent family and commercial hotels, the principal being the Commercial, the Dalhousie, and the Crown. A newspaper, established in 1848, published on Tuesday morning, entitled the Brechin Advertiser, is conducted with much talent. The antiquity of Brechin as a royal burgh is of remote date; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, hospital master, and seven councillors, who are also police commissioners. The burgh joins with Forfar, Montrose, Arbroath, and Inverbervie in returning one member to Parliament; the present representative is John S. Will, Esq., Q.C. A burgh or bailie court is held every Wednesday, and oftener when necessary; the magistrates are the judges. A justice of the peace court is held on the first Wednesday in every month, and a sheriff court on the third Tuesday of January, March, May July, September and November; the two last-mentioned courts are for adjudicating small debt claims.

In ancient times the Abbey of Culdees existed here; and in 1150 when Brechin was constituted an episcopal see by David I., it is supposed that the site of this establishment was that selected for the foundation of the Cathedral. An interesting fragment remains of the hospital of Maison Dieu, founded by William Brechin in 1264. The cathedral of St. Ninian, which now forms the parish church, stands on the north verge of a precipitous ravine, which separates the burgh lands from those of Brechin Castle; it was originally a stately Gothic structure, but its architectural symmetry has been materially injured by the injudicious taste displayed in modern repairs. The length is 116 feet and the breadth 61 feet; the steeple is a square erection, 70 feet in height, surmounted by an hexagonal spire of 50 feet. The cathedral of Brechin was one of the few places of worship in which the service of the liturgy was for some time performed without interruption after its promulgation in 1637. The bishop was a man of singularly strong and daring character, and ascended the pulpit with a pair of pistols under his gown, determined to carry the behests of royalty into execution at whatever risk. The places of worship are the parish church (cathedral), East parish church, two Free churches, and three United Presbyterian, a Scotch Episcopal, Roman Catholic, and Evangelical Union chapels, and a meeting house in Bank Street for Plymouth Brethren. Contiguous to the cathedral stands the round tower of Brechin, similar to those in Ireland. It is supposed to have been erected about the year 1010; it is built of freestone, 85 feet in height to the cornice, and 25 feet more to the pinnacle of a modern spire It has several windows—four in particular, at the top, facing the cardinal points. The entrance to the tower is by a door 5 feet from the ground, on the outside; the whole edifice has been repaired by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and new wooden ladders erected. Numerous figures in an antique style of carving and a rude representation of the crucifixion, are the surrounding ornaments to the door. The diameter of the tower at the bottom is 16 feet. Formerly there were two small bells in it, which were removed to the large steeple, where they now hang. Between the town and the river, and only separated from the former by the ravine before mentioned, stands Brechin Castle, an ancient seat of the Maules of Panmure, now represented by the Earl of Dalhousie; it is built on a precipitous rock overhanging the stream. It sustained a siege of twenty days in 1303 from the English army under Edward I., but Sir Thomas Maule, its commander, being killed, it surrendered. The south front, towards the river, consists of some remains of the original structure, with some more recent erections, including a handsome square tower; the west front is formed with regularity, in the style of the seventeenth century, with round towers at the angles.

Brechin has the advantage of numerous educational seminaries, and these have stimulated even the humble classes to the acquisition of knowledge, which is ministered to them by means of several excellent public libraries, the volumes of which are in active demand. One of the chief architectural ornaments of the town is the Mechanics' Institution, containing an excellent library, reading room and billiard club. The front is in the Tudor style, with castellated parapet ornamented with pinnacles; a fine tower rises in the centre to the height of eighty or ninety feet, from the summit of which there is an enchanting prospect. This elegant structure was erected at the sole cost of the late Lord Panmure, who also presented to the institution numerous valuable paintings, which grace the fine hall of the Institution. His Lordship's munificence also granted £1,000 to be invested at interest, which yields about £40 a year, and is appropriated to enriching the library with books and the support of courses of lectures; and the subscribers are entitled to the benefit of the whole, for a very small payment annually. A very handsome building for the Young Men's Christian Association has been erected in Bank street at a cost of £1,500, and was opened in 1878, the money being raised by public subscriptions. Also in the same year was erected the Almshouse, on the hill in Infirmary street, at a cost of £3,000; the old poorhouse, in City road, has been converted into a model lodging house, and is the property of the town council. This town has given birth to more men of genius and literary distinction than any town, in proportion to its size, in Scotland, among whom may be enumerated Maitland, the laborious historian of Edinburgh and London; Dr. Gillies, the historian of Greece; his brother, Lord Adam Gillies, Dr. Thomas Guthrie, and Colvin Smith, the eminent artist to whom Sir Walter Scott sat on five different occasions, and numerous others. Trinity Muir, one mile north of the town, besides being the site of several great fairs, is resorted to by cricket and golf players during the summer. The market is held on Tuesday, and the fairs (held on Trinity Muir), the third Wednesday and Thursday in August, and the Tuesday before the last Wednesday in September. The great sheep, cattle, and horse fair (on Trinity Muir), which commences on the second Wednesday in June, and continues for three days, is one of the largest in Scotland. "Croft" markets, for cattle, are held in the town, and horse markets, also, towards the end of February and beginning of March. Brechin parish embraces an area of 14,313 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 10,499, the town containing 9,031.

FARNELL is a parish 4 miles S.S.E. from Brechin, its post town, and 6½ S.W. from Montrose; it is about three miles in length and two in breadth, bounded on the north by Brechin, on the south by Rossie Muir, on the east by Maryton, and on the west by Kinnell and Brechin. Kinnaird Castle, the family seat of the Earl of Southesk, is acknowledged to be one of the most superb seats of the Scottish nobility, and is built in the style of a French chateau; it contains a good collection of paintings, and has an imposing and princely appearance, with its beautiful grounds and other ornamental appendages, being situated in a deer park of about 1,300 acres in extent. Acreage, 5,703; population in 1881, 613.

BROUGHTY-FERRY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF MONIFIETH AND MURROES, AND THE HAMLETS OF BARNHILL AND NEWBIGGING.

BROUGHTY-FERRY is a considerable modern town and police burgh, seated on the Firth of Tay, about 4 miles E. from Dundee, nearly opposite to Ferry-Port-on-Craig, or Tayport, and on the Dundee and Arbroath railway. The place takes its name from the old ruined castle of Broughty or Burgh Tay (the defence of the Tay, situated on its south-eastern extremity), on a rocky eminence jutting into the water. The castle until lately was in ruins, but is now restored, and made into a formidable defence for the mouth of the Tay. Broughty is divided into two districts, EAST FERRY and WEST FERRY—the former is in the parish of Monifieth, the latter in that of Dundee; it is regularly built, and has improved very considerably during the last few years, having become the place of residence of many of the principal bankers and merchants of Dundee, whose pleasant houses and cottages are thickly scattered on the hill side. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and a Savings Bank are established here. The town is governed by commissioners of police and police magistrates, under the provisions of the Police Act of 1862. At one time the East Ferry comprised only a few fishermen's huts, built along the beach; the population is now considerable, while people from various parts of the country visit it during the summer months to enjoy its pleasant scenery, pure air, and for the sake of its excellent bathing accommodation. There are no public works here, the inhabitants being chiefly composed of fishermen, tradesmen, and private residents. A new pier and harbour was constructed in 1871, at a cost of about £3,800, projecting in the river about 200 feet due south, with a width of 30 feet. At the outer end of the pier is a wooden platform and slip, supported on piles secured and braced together by horizontal and diagonal timbers, forming an angle running eastward in the direction of the North British railway pier, which gives it a semi-dock like appearance. There is berthage for four or five small vessels. The slip is of a uniform breadth of 20 feet, running from the top of the pier down to low water, partly under the platform at a gentle declination; this arrangement will accommodate vessels at low water, and the landing and embarking of passengers from small steamers at any state of tide. Storehouse, office, and steelyard have also been added. About half a mile to the north of Broughty-Ferry is Fort-hill, where were lately some remains of fortifications erected by the English in 1548, during the reign of Henry VIII., and regency of the Earl of Arran, when they ravaged Dundee and the surrounding country; in 1550 the works on this hill being surrendered to an allied army of Scots, Germans, and French, under M. Des Thermies, were dismantled, and at the present day they present merely shattered relics, the plough having occasionally been driven over a part of the ground which they once covered. There are ten places of worship—two Established, three Free, two United Presbyterian, one Episcopal, one Independent, and one Baptist. The East Free church, built in 1835, is a very handsome Gothic structure. There are also three Board schools, one of which —the Eastern—has been built since the new Education Act came into operation, and the other two have been enlarged and much improved. Besides these there is a secondary or collegiate school, and a few ladies' schools. There are also two Public Halls. Population of the town in 1881, 6,487.

MONIFIETH is a parish lying on the shore of the Firth of Tay, extending inland about 4½ miles from south to north, and the breadth from 1½ to 3¼ miles, embracing 5,952 acres. It is bounded on the south by the Firth of Tay, and on the east by the parishes of Barry and Monikie, on the north by Monikie, and on the west by Murroes and Dundee. The name is understood to be derived from the Gaelic appellation of Monifuith or the "stag moss." The village of Monifieth is situated about two miles E. from Broughty-Ferry, on a brae with a southern exposure, and within a short distance of the sea. It contains some very fine villas, a machine works, and a large jute spinning mill. It has a parish and two Free churches. The parish church, though plain in appearance, is a conspicuous edifice, surrounded by a burying ground, containing a variety of finely-carved antique tombstones. There are also two Board schools. There is a station in the village, on the Dundee and Arbroath joint line of railway. Population of the parish (which includes the greater portion of Broughty-Ferry) in 1881, 9,521.

BARNHILL, one mile E. from Broughty-Ferry, in the same parish, is a station on the Dundee and Forfar direct line, opened for passenger traffic November 14th, 1870, which has facilitated the opening out of this locality in building sites, and it has now become a favourite place of residence. Here is a Convalescent Home in connection with the Dundee Royal Infirmary, erected in 1876, and opened in March, 1877, from funds left by the late Sir David Baxter, Bart.

NEWBIGGING is a small hamlet in the parish of Monikie, about 7 miles N.E. of Dundee (its post town). It contains a United Presbyterian church, a very neat building, also a Board school. Population returned with the parish.

MURROES, a parish in the southern part of the county, is 3 miles in length by 2 in breadth, bounded by Dundee and Mains on the south, Monifieth on the east, Mains and Tealing on the west, and Inverarity and Monikie on the north, lying on the road from Brechin to Dundee, its post town, from which latter it is about 5 miles N.E. distant. The greater part of the parish is arable, and it is adorned with some plantations. There are quarries producing quantities of pavement and other kinds of stone. The parish church is the only place of worship. A public school, with a house adjoining for the master, has been erected. The nearest railway station is at Kingennie on the Dundee and Forfar line of railway. Acreage, 5,298. Population in 1881, 749.

CARNOUSTIE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF BARRY, MONIKIE, PANBRIDE, MUIRDRUM, NEWTON OF PANBRIDE, AND EAST AND WEST HAVEN.

CARNOUSTIE is a thriving village, post town and station on the Dundee and Arbroath Joint railway, in the parish of Barry. It is a pleasant sea bathing place, situated on the east coast of the German Ocean, about 10 miles E. from Dundee, and 7 S.W. from Arbroath, and is much resorted to in the summer months by visitors from Dundee and other parts of Scotland. Since the introduction of a supply of pure water, and a thorough system of drainage, it is considered one of the best seaside resorts on the east coast. On the extensive links or downs in the neighbourhood of the village is a battery, where the naval reserve exercise with heavy guns. The village is well supplied with gas. There are several handsome villas in and near the village, and many respectable lodging houses; also the large linen manufactory of Messrs. Smieton & Sons, who employ upwards of 400 hands; an extensive vitriol works, belonging to Messrs. Tennant & Co. of Glasgow; a Savings Bank, and branches of the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and others for the Free, United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, and an Episcopal church. There are also public schools. Population in 1881, 3,821.

BARRY, or BARRIE, is a parish, bounded on the north and west by Monikie and Monifieth, on the east by Panbride, on the south by the German Ocean and the Firth of Tay; extending about three miles from east to west, and four miles from north to south. The village is 9 miles E. from Dundee, and not quite that distance south-west from Arbroath on the road from the latter town to Bronghty Ferry, and contains the parish church, a Free church, and a public school. The southern half of the parish is generally sandy, and used principally for the grazing of sheep and cattle; the northern half contains many large farms, all of them in the highest state of cultivation. The Dundee and Arbroath Railway has a station near the village. At BUDDONNESS, on the southern extremity of the parish are two lighthouses to guide vessels on their entrance into the Tay. The parish of Barry comprises an area of 5,928 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 3,233.

MONIKIE is a parish seven miles in length by five in breadth, having an area of 8,921 statute acres, bounded on the south by the parishes of Barry and Monifieth, 9 miles N.E. from Dundee, 6 N.E. from Broughty Ferry, and about 5 miles N.W. from Carnoustie (its post town). There is a station here on the Dundee and Forfar section of the Caledonian Railway. The land is well cultivated, much of the produce being required for the Dundee market. Whinstone, freestone, sandstone, and pavement stone abound in the parish. It contains the parish church, a Free church, and a church at the village of NEWBIGGING for the United Presbyterians, there are also public schools. About half a mile south of the parish church, on the Hill of Downie, stands a monument 105 feet in height, which was erected in 1839, during the lifetime of the late Lord Panmure, by his tenantry as a testimonial for the many favours they had received at his hands. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,412.

PANBRIDE is a parish which joins Barry and Monikie on the west, Carmylie on the north, Arbilot on the north-east, and a detached part of St. Vigeans on the south-east; it runs about 4½ miles inland from the German Ocean, and in width is about 2 miles, embracing an area of 5,199 statute acres. It contains the village of MUIRDRUM and NEWTON OF PANBRIDE, the last being now considered as forming part of Carnoustie, from which it is divided by the Lochty burn. A mile further to the east are the Panbride Bleach Works, belonging to Mr. J. F. Dickson. In the northern part stands the house of Panmure, with its extensive enclosures and plantations. The parish is watered by a streamlet that runs through a valley called Battie's Den, over which is thrown a high bridge on the turnpike road from Dundee to Arbroath. The inhabitants are principally engaged in fishing and agricultural pursuits. The coast is flat and rocky, but has two open harbours at the fishing villages of EAST and WEST HAVEN. At the former is a station on the Dundee and Arbroath Railway. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,395.

DUNDEE,

WITH THE PARISH OF MAINS AND STRATHMARTINE, AND THE VILLAGES OF DOWNFIELD AND LONGFORGAN (PERTHSHIRE.)

DUNDEE is an important royal burgh and seaport, on the north bank of the Firth of Tay, about nine miles from its mouth. It is the second town in point of commercial importance, and the third in respect of population in Scotland, and has recently been raised by Royal Charter to the status of a city. The parish is bounded on the south by the Tay; on the north by the united parishes of Mains and Strathmartine; on the east by Murroes and Monifieth; and on the west by the united parishes of Liff and Benvie, a large portion of which is incorporated with the burgh. The town is 43 miles N. from Edinburgh, 66 S.S.W. from Aberdeen, 29 S.W. from Montrose, 23 E. by N. from Perth, 17 S.W. from Arbroath, and 14 S. from Forfar. The Caledonian and North British railways have each stations in the town. The Caledonian railway system connects Dundee with Perth, Stirling and the west of Scotland generally, and London and the south by the West Coast lines. One branch runs northward to Newtyle, Blairgowrie, and Alyth, and another branch runs direct to Forfar, the county town. The Caledonian are joint owners with the North British Company of the Dundee and Arbroath railway, which connects Dundee with Arbroath, Montrose, Aberdeen and the whole north-east of Scotland. The North British has running powers for a certain distance over the east and west lines, and has a joint right in part of both the terminal stations—one situated at the east and the other at the west end of Dock street. It has also constructed the Arbroath and Montrose direct line, which greatly increases the facilities for communication between Dundee and the south-eastern portion of Forfarshire and the south-western portion of Kincardineshire. In 1870 the North British Railway Company obtained an Act of Parliament for bridging the Tay at Dundee. The bridge was designed by Sir Thomas Bouch, the Company's engineer, the plans being for a single line of rails only. Work was commenced in June, 1871, but in the course of construction various drawbacks were encountered, the greatest of these being the unexpected differences in the nature of the river bottom, which rendered a modification of the original plan necessary, cast-iron piers having to be substituted for brick piers in the larger portion of the structure. After considerable delay, the bridge was completed and opened for traffic on the 31st May, 1878. It was for his services in connection with this undertaking that Mr. Bouch was shortly afterwards knighted. The bridge was 10,612 feet in length, and consisted of 85 spans, some of these being over 90 feet above high water level, and the cost was said to be £350,000. Unfortunately, in designing the structure, sufficient allowance was not made for the force of the hurricanes which occasionally sweep down the valley of the Tay, and on the evening of the 28th December, 1879, during the prevalence of a gale of unusual force, while the mail train from Edinburgh was passing over it, the whole of the "high girders," extending over thirteen spans, were blown into the river, together with the train, leaving a gap of 3,000 feet. Upwards of seventy persons perished with the train. During the short time the bridge was available for the train service, its great advantage as a link in connection with the railway accommodation between the north-northeast of Scotland and the south was clearly demonstrated. It was also seen that the direct and easy communication opened up with the Fife coal fields would come to be of immense benefit, both to the railway company and the trade of Dundee. These considerations led the North British directors to take steps to restore the means of communication, and ultimately it was decided to build a new bridge, and the plans by Mr. Barlow were approved by Parliament in May, 1881. The new bridge has a double line of rails, and is some ten feet lower at the extreme height than the wrecked bridge. It is expected that sufficient allowance has been made in the new structure to meet the enormous lateral pressure of the severest gales. The spans are 85 in number, nearly corresponding to those of the former bridge, and the total length of the viaduct from the Fife shore to the brick arches on the north side is 10,545 feet 6 inches, or within a few feet of two miles long. The contractors, Messrs. Arrol and Company, of Glasgow, introduced several ingenious contrivances for facilitating the work during construction, the most noticeable being pontoons on legs, known as "quadrupeds," which enabled the piers to be sunk independent of tides and storms, and a hydraulic rivetting machine. The massive character of the new structure contrasts very favourably with the ruins of the old bridge, the piers of which alone are standing. It was opened for general traffic in June, 1887, and public confidence in its stability is entire; its vibration, even with the passing of the heaviest trains, being almost imperceptible.

The situation of Dundee is very beautiful. The river here forms a bay two miles broad, from the margin of which the town spreads itself over a gradual acclivity, ascending towards the base of a lofty and sheltering eminence called "Dundee Law." The picturesque coast of Fifeshire forms the southern border of the Tay, and a steam ferry-boat effects frequent communication between the opposite shores of the estuary. Dundee is a place of considerable antiquity. From a fishing hamlet it came to be a walled town, with a castle of considerable strength. It was created a royal burgh by William I. in 1164, this privilege, according to tradition, having been obtained by David, Earl of Huntingdon, who, after escaping the perils of shipwreck, landed at this place on his return from the crusade. During the usurpation of Edward I., the town was made the station of an English garrison; and in the course of the struggle for the Scottish crown between that prince (nominally on behalf of Baliol) and Robert Bruce, Dundee was taken and re-taken twice. The patriot Wallace, whose deeds have enkindled the enthusiasm of bard and historian, received his education at the Grammar School of Dundee. When at school Wallace was mixed up in a quarrel with the English governor's son, and having killed him had to seek safety in flight. The castle of Dundee becoming so formidable an annoyance when in possession of an enemy, an occurrence but too frequent, Bruce deemed it expedient to demolish it, and not a vestige of it now remains. Its site was near the present Castle street —that street having been formed by blasting a portion of the rock on which it stood. The town was destroyed in the reign of Richard II. of England, and it suffered a similar infliction when Edward VI. sat upon the English throne; but on each occasion it speedily recovered, and resumed its rank among the principal Scottish towns, several times being pledged as security for ransoms, and for the fulfilment of treaties. It was also a place of royal residence, there being a palace to the south of the Nethergate, and a mint at the foot of the Overgate, the site of which is still indicated by the name of "Mint Close," given to an entry in that quarter. Robert III. was the first sovereign who struck coin at the mint. The oldest charter that Dundee can boast of is one granted by Robert Bruce, recognizing the burghal privileges conferred by William the Lion, brother to the Earl of Huntingdon, mentioned above. In this place the reformed religion found some of its earliest and warmest defenders. So zealous was the town in its cause, as to be honoured with the appellation of "the second Geneva." In 1544 George Wishart, who suffered martyrdom at St. Andrews, preached here, and on one occasion narrowly escaped assassination at the hands of one of Cardinal Beaton's emissaries. The occasion was a sermon preached by Wishart; from the East Port, during the plague — the plague-stricken being outside the wall. In memory of the event, the East Port, the only portion of the old walls extant, is still kept standing, although it cannot be called either ornamental or useful. In April, 1645, the Duke of Montrose took Dundee by assault, the inhabitants suffering severely in the carnage which ensued. The last calamity of this kind that befel this town was its capture and plunder a few years later, by General Monk. This event is the subject of many local traditions. In connection with this short historical sketch we may mention a few eminent names that have conferred honour on Dundee, from its being the place either of their birth, education, or labour;—Hector Boece, the historian; Sir William Wallace; John Blair; Goldman and Ferguson, the poets; Sir George Mackenzie, the scholar and lawyer; and in more recent days, Drs. Small, Willison, Davidson, and Russell; Nicoll the poet; George Gilfillan the critic and preacher; and the naval victor, Admiral Duncan. The author of the "Song of the Shirt" also resided in the town for a short time, and some of his first efforts at versifying appeared in the columns of the Dundee Advertiser.

COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURES.—Dundee is a place of great commercial activity, and is the principal seat of the linen and jute manufactures. The rapid increase, both of its productions and shipping, is the most striking feature of its recent history. When Monk captured the place in 1651, sixty vessels were found in the harbour, so richly laden as to afford a booty to the captors exceeding in value the whole of their spoils "in the wars throughout the three nations." The plunder, however, did not enrich the captors, for the ships sunk in passing the bar. This heavy blow crushed the rising commerce of the town, and for several years few vessels floated in the deserted harbour. In 1669, however, thirty-seven vessels arrived in the port; in 1673, forty-nine; in 1680, eighty-five; but in 1731 the number had considerably decreased, and the trade continued to dwindle till this once flourishing port was resorted to chiefly by fisherman and smugglers. But from the situation of Dundee, the commodiousness of its harbour, and the enterprise of its inhabitants, such a state of matters could not last always. The tide of commerce turned, and once more set into the forsaken haven. In 1745 the port dues scarcely amounted to £1,200; but in 1792 the number of vessels belonging to the town had increased to 116, measuring 8,550 tons; and about the same period the foreign clearances outwards and inwards were nearly 12,000 tons, while the coasting trade was about 60,000. Since 1815, when the harbour was placed under new management, the increase has been enormous and the total revenue from all sources from that date until May, 1887, amounted in the aggregate to £2,570,414. During the year ending May, 1887, the revenue amounted to £60,211; in the year ending May, 1861, it was only £35,329. The augmentation of its shipping gave an impluse to improvement; new sea walls and quays were built, the tidal harbour was extended, wet docks and graving docks were constructed, and such undertakings were effected that there are but few ports in Great Britain which afford greater facilities and accommodation for shipping. In 1815 the management of the harbour was placed in the hands of Commissioners appointed annually under an Act of Parliament; but by a new Act, passed in June, 1830, the management was transferred to trustees to be elected annually; the provost, bailies, and dean of guild to be perpetual trustees, in virtue of their office. The harbour is well managed, and the extensions rendered necessary by the increased business of the port are pushed rapidly forward. The total expenditure for constructing and maintaining the harbour from July, 1815, to May 31, 1887, inclusive of interest on debt and sinking fund, was £2,570,414. The total cost of harbour and property up to date amounted to £922,810. The debt due by the Dundee

Harbour on the 31st May, 1887, amounted to £352,426. The progressive increase of revenue will appear from the following statement:—

The number of vessels belonging to the port in 1887 was 181, of the aggregate register of about 115,968 tons. The whale fishery employs several ships from this port, all fitted with screw propellers. Steam navigation is successfully conducted by the Dundee, Perth, and London shipping Company, whose vessels ply to London twice a week, and to Hull weekly. These steamships have obtained a high character for swiftness and excellent accommodation. There is also regular steam communication with Newcastle and Liverpool, besides several large steamers engaged exclusively in the coal trade. Direct steam communication is carried on with New York at irregular intervals. The earliest articles manufactured in the town seem to have been soap and glass, which engaged a great number of hands; and the brewing of ale was carried on to some extent. The glass manufacture has died out, as has also the sugar refining, which was once carried on. In 1806, however, a new branch of manufacture—that of linseed crushing—was established, and has since been carried on to a moderate extent. The manufacture of shoe uppers by the sewing machine was introduced by Messrs. Henderson (whose tanning and leather works are on a very extensive scale), some years ago, and has been very successful. The wholesale shoe trade, which at one time flourished in this town, has been recently revived. There are two large manufactories, employing a considerable number of persons, and there is every reason to believe that the trade has taken firm root in the place. The manufacture of marmalade has for many years employed a large number of hands, Dundee marmalade being famous throughout the world. Messrs. Keiller and Sons' establishment is probably the largest in the kingdom, and there are other firms extensively engaged in the trade. The business of building ships flourished at an early period, and such an occupation soon led to the manufacture of cordage, which still remains a branch of commerce, but not to such an extent as formerly.

The manufacture of cotton was once tried, and had the appearance of forming an important branch in the trade of Dundee, having at one time seven companies engaged in it; but at length it declined, and finally died away, in favour of Glasgow. The manufacture of woollen cloths was next attempted, but met with no success. Out of these failures arose a spirit for manufacturing goods from flax; and, as an encouragement to this branch in its infancy, a bounty was given by the Government on all linen exported, and a heavy duty laid on the importation of foreign linens. Whatever the effect of these enactments, the trade of Dundee continued to increase, and since the introduction of the jute manufacture, the progress of the town has been very great. The following returns of the quantities of flax, &c. imported in various years since 1745 will show the progress of the flax trade:—

Jute was first brought under the notice of Dundee manufacturers by the late Thomas Neish, Esq. As the fibre was hard and difficult to work, it did not attract much attention at first. With improved machinery, however, and the discovery of the means of softening the fibre, jute gradually grew more in favour, until the outbreak of the civil war in America, through causing a stoppage of the cotton supply, gave the trade an impetus which has since gone on increasing, owing to the cheapness at which cloth can be produced from the fibre, and its usefulness for various important purposes. At first the fibre was imported in small quantities to London and Liverpool, and thence transshipped to Dundee. As the trade grew in importance, however, manufacturers began to import direct from Calcutta, and the direct imports now greatly exceed the importation into London. Most of the jute received in Liverpool and London also finds its way to Dundee. In 1849, the imports (exclusive of coast-ways) amounted to 8,176 tons; in 1850, 8,127 tons were received. In 1865, the receipts at the harbour, both coast-ways and from Calcutta, reached 36,291 tons. Since then the importation has gone on in an increasing ratio. To give an idea of the expansion of the trade, we give the following returns for the years ending 31st December, 1870, 1875, 1884, and 1887:—

The only other imports from foreign countries to which attention need be directed are timber and whale and seal blubber, the former being about 50,000 loads annually, and the latter varying of course according to the success or failure of the fishing, but probably averaging not less than 2,500 tons each season. The oil produced from this blubber is chiefly used for "batching" the jute in its raw state, in order to soften the fibre, and facilitate the various operations of preparing and spinning. The exports of manufactured goods from the harbour by no means represent the extent of business done in the town, the larger portion of the manufactured goods being sent by rail to Glasgow and Liverpool for export to the United States, South America, Australia, &c. The total quantity of linen and jute goods sent by rail from the town in the year 1868 was 71,400 tons; in 1869, 75,570 tons; in 1875, 72,518 tons, and in 1884, 76,283 tons. During the past few years the staple trade of the town, in sympathy with the general trade of the country, has been in a very depressed condition. Fifty years ago, there were only four steam spinning mills; there are now probably above one hundred, including spinning and weaving factories. The various productions from flax, hemp, and jute, as has been stated, form the staple trade of the town. The raw materials are imported chiefly from Russia, Prussia, Holland and India; these are spun by steam power into thread, which, after being bleached, are woven into osnaburghs, sheetings, baggings, sailcloth, sacking, dowlas, &c. During the year 1850, the trade of Dundee became animated by augmenting briskness, showing that free trade had increased the prosperity of this important port. At the commencement of the civil war in America, as has been said, the trade of Dundee increased to a most extraordinary extent, fabrics of jute and linen being in great demand to take the place of cotton. Almost every mill received additions, and a large number of new mills were erected. The manufacture of machinery, steam engines, boilers, and millwright work is in a flourishing condition and carried on extensively by several eminent firms, among whom may be mentioned Messrs. Carmichael & Co., Ward Foundry; Thomson, Son & Co., Douglas Foundry; Urquhart, Lindsay & Co., Blackness Foundry; W. B. Thompson, Tay Foundry; Gourlay, Brothers & Co., Dundee Foundry; Pearce Brothers, Lilybank Foundry; and Robertson & Orchar, Wallace Foundry. Iron ship building and marine engineering are also important features in the general prosperity and industry of the town, and give employment to a large number of artisans. Messrs. Gourlay Brothers & Co., Alexander Stephen & Sons, W. B. Thompson & Co., Limited, and Pearce Brothers, are the principal firms engaged in these important industries. There are also several extensive saw mills and timber yards, the principal of which belong to Mr. John Jossiman, Messrs Bell & Sime, and Messrs. Fleming & Barry.

DESCRIPTIVE SKETCH OF DUNDEE.—Although Dundee is not conspicuous for architectural beauty, it contains several handsome streets. The town is illuminated with gas, the manufacture of which is in the hands of the Corporation. The water supply is also in the same hands, the principal supply being obtained from the Loch of Lintrathem and the river Melgum. The greater part of the mansions of the opulent are ranged on the lofty bank of the Tay, westward of the town. This situation commands a view of the river and the beautiful scenery on the opposite coast. In the central part of the town is a wide oblong area, called the High street, on the south side of which stands the Town House, comprising the Guild Hall, Court Room, and appropriate offices, together with repositories for the town records. The Town House was finished in 1734, from a plan of the elder Adams. The front is handsome, beneath which is a piazza; and from the centre of the building rises a lofty spire, 140 feet high. A large addition has been made to the building, with the view of accommodating all the public offices, but they are at present somewhat scattered. A little to the east of the High street, rises the lofty and elegant spire of St. Paul's Episcopal church. This beautiful church is built on the Castle hill, near to the site of the ancient castle. It is in the Gothic style, from designs of Sir Gilbert Scott, and the spire has been fitted up with a peal of bells, the gift of various members of the congregation. To the zeal and cultivated taste of the late Bishop Forbes the town owes this addition to its architectural beauties. An elegant building has been erected by the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, at the east end of High street, in connection with the improvements carried out by the corporation in that quarter. New Commercial street is a splendid thoroughfare, lined on either side by elegant shops and houses, and the old narrow dingy Murraygate and Seagate have given place to wide streets. A street with superb and highly ornate buildings, is also at present (1888) in the course of formation, from the Nethergate, southwards. At the lower end it curves semi-circularly towards South Union street on the west, and Green Market on the east. The Gilfillan Memorial Hall occupies a fine site facing the north, in the centre of this curve. This building has been recently finished, and is now occupied for worship by the congregation of the Rev. David Macrae. It is also intended, for which it is admirably adapted, for holding concerts and meetings on week evenings. This street has been named Whitehall street, after the ancient Whitehall Palace, which was situated here, and its formation has caused the destruction of a great number of squalid and ungainly tenements, which previously occupied its site. The Public Hall, in Bank street (for which the inhabitants of Dundee are mainly indebted to Lord Kinnaird), is an excellent addition to the public buildings of this town. It is in the Anglo-Italian style of architecture, and its interior is plain, but bold and massive in detail. Above the entrance lobbies, and projecting into the hall is a gallery capable of accommodating about 200 people seated comfortably. On the right and left of the entrances are small retiring rooms. The hall itself is a spacious apartment, 130 by 60 feet, and 42 feet 6 inches high, and capable of accommodating about 3,500 people. In 1864 a movement was made for a public organ to improve the hall, and £1,500 was subscribed for the purpose. The organ was inaugurated on the 5th October, 1865, by a grand performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," by the Dundee Cecilia Society. The orchestra in front of the organ can accommodate some 280 performers. Immediately opposite the Kinnaird Hall stands an elegant and imposing building, 240 feet in length and three storeys in height, with a sunk floor containing printing machinery, &c. the printing establishment of the Dundee Advertiser and the People's Journal. This is probably one of the best equipped newspaper printing offices in the country. On the ground floor, the publishing and business departments are conveniently situated; the second floor is mainly devoted to the accommodation of the editorial, reporting and literary staff; and on the third floor is the composing department, a large room 103 feet long by 35 feet wide, and 28 feet from floor to ceiling, and the stereotyping, lithographing and bookbinding departments. A direct telegraph wire connects the establishment with a branch office in Fleet street, London, and by this means long special reports of parliament, stock exchange business, and other important matters are daily supplied to the readers of this paper. On a commanding site in Lindsay street the premises of the Dundee Courier are situated. These buildings, which were only erected a few years ago to provide for an increasing business, are of a chaste and striking architectural design. The front edifice is occupied by the commercial, warehouse, publishing, reporting and editorial departments. Behind the main building the composing and machine departments are accommodated in a handsome two-storey structure, which contains nearly 10,000 feet of floor space. They are lofty, well lighted, and finely ventilated apartments, and are admitted by newspaper men, who have visited them from all quarters to be amongst the finest rooms of the kind in the country. Looking up Reform street, an elegant edifice with chaste Doric columns meets the eye. This is the High School, erected in 1894, at a cost of £10,000, but since then extensive additions have been made to it, one of the latest being a gymnasium and workshop. New class rooms for girls have also been erected on a site acquired on the opposite side of Euclid street, which are intended to be immediately added to. When these are finished the school will rank with the best in the country for accommodation and efficiency. The curriculum includes all the branches embraced in what is known as a liberal education. On the modern side the pupils are trained for commercial life, whilst on the classical side they receive an education which fits them to enter the universities, with the advantage of being well grounded in literature, science, and the ancient and modern languages. The institution is largely indebted to the late ex-Bailie Harris, who gave £20,000 for the purpose of improving it. Miss Harris, sister of the above, has also been a munificent benefactor to the school. Besides the above munificent bequest to the High Schools, Mr. Harris bequeathed the sum of £10,000 for the erection of a great building which has been named after him—the Harris Academy—at which secondary education and the elements of science are taught by a very efficient staff. Since its opening, this institution has proved a splendid addition to the educational facilities of the town. In addition to the above there are numerous public schools and many private educational establishments. A large new building, called the Albert Institute, has been erected to the south-east of this school, the western portion from designs by Sir Gilbert Scott, and the eastern portion from designs by Mr. Mackenzie, an able local architect. The cost of the entire building was about £25,000, exclusive of the site, which cost £8,000. The building comprises a public hall, library, reading room, and museum. The design is decorated Gothic, with a grand staircase on the west front. The library, reading room, and museum are free to the public, the town having some years ago adopted the Free Libraries Act. At the present time a great addition in the same style of architecture is being erected on the north, to be named in honour of the Queen's Jubilee, the Victoria Picture Gallery. In the grounds in front of the Albert Institute a statue of George Kinloch, the first representative of the burgh in the first reformed Parliament, has been placed. It is cast in bronze, and does great credit to the artist, Mr. Steell, Edinburgh. In the south-west corner of the grounds a bronze statue of Burns, also by Steell, has been placed. There is also a statue, in the same grounds, of the late Mr. Carmichael, the inventor of the fan blast. A fountain, which was erected at considerable cost, but which, in the opinion of many, is not all that can be desired, faces the west front of the Institute. To the south of the Albert Institute stand the elegant and convenient Club House, the Free Gaelic church, and the National Bank buildings. In the Nethergate, a short distance west from the High street, stand the "Town's Churches," and the "Old Steeple." The church, or rather churches, of which this tower is the remnant, were destroyed by fire in 1841, but were re-built; and the dimensions of the block are so capacious as to comprise three distinct parochial churches within its walls. Inside the grounds stands the ancient market cross, removed from High street. It is a carved pillar, supporting an unicorn, which holds an armorial shield between its knees. Tradition ascribes the erection of the tower to David, Earl of Huntingdon, but its architectural features indicate a later date as the period of erection. It has undergone a restoration under the superintendence of Sir Gilbert Scott. A peal of bells, the gift of a number of generous citizens, has been placed in the tower, which is looked upon as one of the finest specimens of the style of architecture to which it belongs to be met with. Adjoining the church of St. Andrew, in the Cowgate, is a meeting-house, for the Glassites—a section of the religious world founded by Mr. John Glass, who, it appears, was made a freeman of Dundee by the town council in 1759.

Besides the burial grounds belonging to the corporation, the Western Cemetery, in the Perth road, has a beautiful site, and is gracefully planted with shrubs and flowers. In this cemetery lie the remains of William Thom, known as the Inverary Poet, and the author of the "Mitherless Bairn." Dudhope Castle, originally the seat of the Scrymgeour family, standard bearers to the Scottish kings, stands on the face of the rising ground to the north of the town, and was at one time the property of Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee; it is now converted into a barracks. From the approach to this ancient mansion is a fine view of the gaol, the plan of which admits of the classification of offenders. Adjoining the entrance to the barracks is the public bleaching green; near this spot a time gun has been placed. The Royal Infirmary, erected in 1853, near to the barracks, furnishes an attractive evidence of the benevolent efforts of the wealthy for the amelioration of human suffering and misery. It is from designs by Messrs. Coe & Goodwin, of London, and has, with its wings, central tower, and embattled parapets, a very noble appearance. The Royal Orphan Institution, founded in 1815, is an admirable charity, the orphans being accommodated in a beautiful and commodious building at Craigie terrace, overlooking the river. The Dundee Industrial Schools Society watch over two excellent institutions for the educational training of neglected children. One, for girls, is accommodated in a suitable building in Ward's road; the other, for boys, is at Baldovan, a healthy suburban village to the north of the town. There is also an excellent asylum at Baldovan, under the patronage of Queen Victoria, for the treatment of imbecile and idiot children. In this place mention may be made of the Mars Training Ship Institution for Homeless and Destitute Boys. The "Mars," an old three-decker, is moored in the Tay at Woodhaven, and several hundred boys are educated on board chiefly with a view to their either joining merchant vessels or vessels belonging to the royal navy. An institution for the education of the deaf and dumb, established in 1846, and situated at Dudhope Bank, Lochee road, is another noteworthy educational enterprise of a charitable nature. It is maintained by the directors of the Dundee Association for Aiding the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, from the interest of invested funds, and from the interest of property left by the late James Key, Esq. The Dundee Royal Lunatic Asylum formerly occupied a site on the Forfar road, but the growth of the town rendered a change necessary, and new buildings were erected in 1832, at West Green, about five miles west of Dundee, which have accommodation for upwards of 300 patients. In style the building is very simple, but the gables are crow stepped, and there are a few turrets introduced to give it an old Scotch character. The grounds in connection extend to nearly 100 acres. Messrs. Edward and Robertson, Dundee, were the architects, and the cost was about £46,000. In close proximity to the old Lunatic Asylum stands the Poor House, capable of holding about 300 inmates. It was opened for their reception in November, 1856, and cost about £10,000. Since that time wings for hospital purposes have been built at the sole expense of Mr. Molison, chairman of the Parochial Board, at a cost of upwards of £1,000. In the same neighbourhood stands the Morgan Hospital, occupying a commanding site. The building, which is of massive and striking proportions, is seen to advantage from all the higher parts of the town, as well as from the river. This institution is for the education and maintenance of 100 boys, the sons of tradesmen, mechanics, and persons of the working classes generally, whose parents stand in need of assistance, and who are only admitted between the ages of seven and ten years, and leave at the age of fifteen years. One or both of the parents of the boys must have been born in Dundee, Forfar, Montrose, or Arbroath, the preference being given to the boys of parents belonging to this town. The institution owes its existence to the benevolence of the late Mr. Morgan, a native of Dundee, who left the bulk of his fortune to carry out the above-mentioned objects. The total sum secured—after a law plea in regard to the validity of the will—for the erection and maintenance of the institution was £73,500. We may, however, state that the Endowed Schools Commission have recently devised a scheme for this institution on different lines, which will be carried into immediate effect. Instead of continuing as a boarding school, it will, under the School Board, be converted into a secondary school for the east end of the town, on a plan similar to that of the Harris Academy at the west end, by which it is expected that its usefulness will be much enhanced. The building is in the Flemish-Gothic style, and is quadrangular in form, two storeys in height, with an open court inside, and a centre tower rising to the height of 120 feet, the whole being erected from designs by Peddie and Kinnear, architects, Edinburgh, at a cost of about £15,000. Another noble educational institution, the University College, has also been established in the town. Through the munificence of the late Miss Baxter, of Balgavies, and her relation, the late Dr. Boyd Baxter, a sum of £150,000 was provided for this purpose. An excellent site, know as the Whiteleys, in the Nethergate, was secured. There were four large dwelling houses on the ground, and a church belonging to the congregation of Free St. John's. These were utilised as class rooms and laboratories, the church making an excellent college hall. On a portion of the vacant ground a large chemical laboratory was erected at a cost of about £10,000. This laboratory is one of the finest in the kingdom. In all £50,000 was spent in purchasing and equipping the buildings, and the remaining £100,000 was appropriated as a permanent endowment fund. The deed of endowment and trust directs that the college shall be for promoting the education of persons of both sexes for the study of science, literature, and the fine arts. The institution is entirely unsectarian. It is anticipated that the college will shortly be affiliated to the ancient University of St. Andrews. It is also intended to establish a medical school in connection with the college. For that purpose Mr. Thomas H. Cox, has given the handsome donation of £12,000, and the son and daughter of the late Mr. J. H.White, £6,000; so that there is every prospect of it proving a success. There are at present six chairs in the college—Chemistry (Professor Carnelley, D.SC.); Mathematics and Natural Philosophy (Professor Steggall, M.A); Engineering and Drawing (Professor J. A. Ewing, B.SC.); Classics and Ancient History (Professor W. Peterson, M.A. Prineipal of the College); English Language and Literature and Modern History (Professor Thomas Gilray, M.A.); and Biology (Professor D'Arcy Thomson, B.A.). The primary education of the burgh is under the control of the School Board. Including the Harris Academy, the Board has nineteen schools, the majority of which have been erected since the Education Act came into force, and another is at present in course of erection. Another institution which is likely to prove a great boon, especially to artisans, is the Technical Institute, the building for which is now (1888) approaching completion. The sum of £20,000 (since increased to about £26,000) was left by the late Sir David Baxter for the establishment of this school, for the instruction and training of artisans in their various trades and arts, to enable them to perform their duties with the highest efficiency. This structure has been erected on the grounds of University College, where the use of its splendid laboratories will be conveniently available, as well as the services of efficient teachers, and when in operation, it cannot fail to be of much service to the classes for whose benefit it is intended.

In the centre of Dock street, and spanning the north end of the Mid quay, is an ornamental arch, or rather a structure surmounting three arches; a capacious central one, and two of smaller dimensions at the sides. The style is Norman, and each front is richly sculptured with countless intersections of circular arches; two octagonal turrets rise from the summit. This costly monument was raised to commemorate the landing near this spot of Queen Victoria. To the east of King William Dock, in the same street, stands the Custom House, an imposing building with a Grecian portico. Opposite the Custom House a Sailors' Home has been erected. It was formally opened by the Earl of Dalhousie on 16th December, 1881. The building cost upwards of £12,000, the money having been provided by several philanthropic citizens. It is designed in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and has an imposing appearance. There is sleeping room for about 100 seamen, and ample provision has been made for securing the comfort of those who avail themselves of the accommodation provided. The offices of the Mercantile Marine Department are in the same building. From the west end of Dock street, Union street forms a communication with the Nethergate; it contains excellent shops, and the Thistle Hall, much used for public meetings. The various banking establishments occupy buildings which likewise contribute to the embellishment of the town, as well as to the facilities of its trade. At the top of Reform street, and corner of Ward road, are the post and telegraph offices—a handsome and convenient building in the Italian style of architecture. It is an elegant and commodious building, and is in immediate contiguity to the Royal Exchange and Chamber of Commerce; its admirable situation gives it the additional advantage of nearness of access to the business centre of the town. The Royal Exchange and Chamber of Commerce, Panmure street, was erected in 1852, at a cost of about £10,000. It is a handsome building, in the Flemish-Gothic style of the 14th century. The Young Men's Christian Association Rooms, in Constitution road, are probably as well adapted for their purpose as any in the Kingdom. The Curr Night Refuge, in West Bell street, erected by money left for that purpose by the late Mrs. Curr, supplies a long-felt want in affording a comfortable retreat for the night to homeless strangers.

Of late years several elegant churches have been erected in the town. Free St. Paul's and Free St. Enoch's in the Nethergate, and St. Mark's Established Church, Free St. John's, Rychill, U.P. Church, and the M'Cheyne Memorial Church, in the Perth road, may be particularly mentioned.

In 1863 a splendid public park of upwards of 80 acres was presented to the town by the late Sir David Baxter, Bart., and endowed with funds necessary to maintain it. The park, which is at the east end of the town, was beautifully laid out by the late Sir Joseph Paxton, and, with the endowment, cost Sir David not less than £50,000. To the east of the Baxter Park is the Eastern Necropolis, a beautifully laid out cemetery. In 1869 the Corporation acquired Balgay Hill, a wooded eminence at the west end of the town, to be used partly as a public park and partly as a cemetery for the west end of the burgh. The portion retained as a public park is 36 acres in extent. It is finely wooded, and from the higher parts of the ground magnificent views are obtained. Altogether it is one of the finest parks in the kingdom. The Law Hill, behind the town, has also been laid out so as to render it more convenient as a place of recreation. In addition to the two parks mentioned, the inhabitants have the privilege of the Magdalen Green, close by the river at the west end of the town, and the Barrack Park, as places of recreation. The "Esplanade," formed by an arrangement with the railway companies when the Tay Bridge Works were constructed, is one of the finest walks or drives to be found anywhere. It is at the present time (1888) being extended to the westward, to enable the inhabitants to obtain access to the river on the south of the Caledonian Railway, from which they were formerly debarred.

NEWSPAPERS, &c.—Five newspapers issue weekly from the press of Dundee, and maintain an increasing circulation. The Dundee Advertiser is published daily, and a semi-weekly edition on Tuesdays and Fridays, the market days. This, the leading paper, was established originally in 1801. It has an extensive circulation in the county and district as well as in the town. The People's Journal, published on Saturday, is one of the most popular weekly journals in Scotland, with a circulation of 200,000 copies. Some years ago a subscription by its readers raised upwards of £800 for the National Lifeboat Institution. The People's Friend is also published at the offices of the Advertiser. The Evening Telegraph, a halfpenny evening journal, appeals to a large class of readers, and has an extensive circulation in Dundee and the neighbouring towns and villages. The Dundee Courier is the oldest morning paper in the north-east of Scotland. A bi-weekly edition is published on Tuesday and Friday. The Weekly News, published on Saturday has a circulation of over 200,000 copies; it contains tales, historical, military, naval and humerous sketches. Two satirical publications are issued in this town, the Wizard of the North (monthly), and the Piper (weekly).

MUNICIPAL INSTITUTIONS.—The municipal government of Dundee is exercised by a provost, six bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, an hospital master, a kirk master, and a council of, including the magistrates, twenty-eight members. There are six courts held within the town—the Burgh or Bailie Court, the Sheriff's Court, the Commissary Court, the Guild Court, the Police Court, and the Justice of Peace Small Debt Court. The town is divided into districts and wards, for the convenience of the registration of the burgh electors. Dundee sends two representatives to Parliament: Edmund Robertson, Esq. and Joseph F. B. Firth, Esq. are the present members. The principal market days are Tuesday and Friday; and there is a cattle and sheep market held every Tuesday. Fairs—Stobb's fair, for cattle, sheep, and horses, on the 11th July, or the first Tuesday following (o.s.); Dundee first fair, for cattle, sheep, and horses, on the 26th August, if that day falls on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday, if not, the first Tuesday after the 26th August (N.S.); and the second Dundee fair on the 19th September, the same rule observed as that regulating the first fair. Feeing markets for servants are held on the 25th May and on the 22nd November, or on the first Friday thereafter.

The number of inhabitants by the census of 1871 was 118,977, and by the returns of 1881, 142,454, showing an increase in ten years of 23,477. The estimated population in June, 1888, was 160,619. The assessable rental has grown from £87,544 in 1871-72 to £690,692 in 1887-88.

MAINS, formerly called Strathdighty, is a parish lying immediately north of that of Dundee (its post town), about four miles therefrom, and chiefly in the vale of the river Dighty, which intersects the parish, and divides it into two nearly equal parts in its course to the Tay. From the banks of the stream the ground rises gently to the north and south. The soil is fertile and well-cultivated, and the country has a most pleasant aspect. On the Dighty are several mills, and near the north bank of the river is the extensive bleachfield of Claverhouse, at no great distance from which was the seat of General Grahame, whose title of "Claverhouse" (applied from this patrimonial estate) once sounded such alarm in Scotland. The Grahames, of Fintry, were one of the oldest families in this part of the country. Freestone quarries supply some occupation in this parish. The small parish of STRATHMARTINE is now united to that of Mains, which contains the parish church, a Free church, and public schools. DOWNFIELD, a village in this parish, has recently been greatly extended, and is now regarded as a suburb of Dundee, from which it is distant about two and a half miles. An asylum for the treatment of imbicile and idiot children was founded at Baldovan, in 1853, by Lady Jane Ogilvy. The Dundee and Newtyle railway runs through the parish, and has stations at BALDOVAN (Downfield) and BALDRAGON. Acreage, 6,301. Population in 1881, 3,490.

LONGFORGAN is a parish (county of Perth), six miles from Dundee, its post town, and a mile from the station of its name on the Dundee and Perth railway. It varies from one to four miles in breadth, and is nine miles in length, forming the eastern boundary of the carse of Gowrie, and extending along the Tay on its southern extremity for more than four miles. It is surrounded on three sides – by Inchture, Abernyte, Kettins, Lundie and Fowlis, Liff and Benvie. The village is situated on the ridge at an elevation of about 130 feet above the Tay, of which, with the whole of the intermediate country to the east, and particularly to the south and south-west, it commands an uninterrupted prospect. Near here, situated in a dell, are the ruins of a chapel, said to have been erected by Malcolm IV. in 1164, for a community of Cistercian monks. Castle Huntly is the only building of any note in the parish, and forms a noble specimen of an old baronial residence. It was erected about the middle of the fifteenth century, by the second Lord Gray, of Fowlis, who named it after his lady, a daughter of the Earl of Huntly, and who had large possessions in the Carse. Its walls are ten feet thick, and the height of the round tower is 116 feet, and the view from the top is much and deservedly admired, commanding extensive and beautiful prospects of the Fife coast with the Ochils and other loftier mountains, &c. The parish church is conveniently situated, as is also a Board school. The soil of the parish varies in quality, but upon the whole is exceedingly productive. There is also an abundant supply of stone of good quality. A fair is held every third Saturday in June (o.s.), chiefly for the sale of cattle. Acreage of the parish, 8,523; population in 1881, 1,854.

EDZELL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF LETHNOT-NAVAR, LOCHLEE, AND STRACATHRO.

EDZELL is a large parish and village, the latter 6 miles N. from Brechin, its post town. The parish is situated chiefly in this county, with a small portion in Kincardineshire. It is 14 miles in length, and forms the north-east point of the county; the lower part is bounded by Stracathro, the middleby Lethnot, and Navar on the west; and that part in Kincardineshire by Fettercairn on the east; the upper or water-side by Lochee on the west, and on the north by Strachan in Kincardineshire, and Birse in Aberdeenshire. The village is neat and well built, having two main streets with several others diverging therefrom, situated on the banks of the North Esk, and is well supplied with gas by a company, who have their works at the south side of the village. The ruins of the ancient castle of Edzell is the chief object of interest, and is considered one of the finest ruins of the kind in Scotland. It was formerly the residence of the Lindsays of Glen Esk. The North Esk on the east, and the West Water on the West, are the only streams which flow through the parish, which is very healthy. The scenery around is of a very beautiful description, and much resorted to by summer visitors. The Grampian Hills, running east and west, are in the immediate neighbourhood. One mile north of the village, where the North Esk takes its course, a most striking and imposing sight presents itself. The scenery here is truly magnificent, the river forming in some parts cascades or waterfalls. There is a parish church and also a Free church in the village, and a school. There are two first-class hotels in the village, provided with every accommodation for visitors. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in February, first Monday in May, fourth Friday in July, fourth Wednesday in August, and in October for cattle and sheep. The parish embraces an area of 20,068 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 823.

LETHNOT-NAVAR is a joint parish 4½ miles W. from Edzell, and 8 miles N. from Brechin (its post town), 15 miles in length and about 7 miles in breadth, having Edzell on the east, Menmuir on the south, Lochee on the north, Menmuir Fearn, Tannadice, and Clova on the west, and Stracathro on the south-east. The stream called the West Water runs though the middle of the parish, or between Lethnot proper and Navar. The hills in the parish form part of the Grampian range. There is a parish church and school. Acreage 26,290. Population in 1881, 288.

LOCHLEE is a parish 12 miles from Edzell, and 18 from Brechin (its post town). It is about 18 miles in length, by about 8 in breadth, and bounded on the north by the parishes of Birse, Aboyne and Glenmuick in Aberdeenshire, on the west by Cortachy and Clova, on the south by Lethnot and Navar, and on the east by Edzell. It is situated among the Grampians, a mountainous and bleak district, chiefly adapted for pasture, and bordering on the counties of Kincardine and Aberdeen. Some of the eminences of this district vary from 2,000 to 4,000 feet above the sea level. The soil is light, and the crops not very remunerative. Here is some of the finest scenery in Scotland. The parish receives its name through the Loch so named. The principal streams which rise and traverse the parish are the Lee, Mark, and the Tarff, tributaries of the North Esk, which enters the sea near Montrose. AT INVERMARK is the shooting lodge of the Earl of Dalhousie. The parish church is at the west end of the parish. There is an Episcopal church and a parochial school. This district was once the property of the Lindsays of Glen Esk, but now Lord Dalhousie is sole heritor. Acreage, 58,382. Population in 1881, 359.

STRACATHRO, anciently written Strickathrow, is a parish about 7 miles long and 2 broad, bounded on the north-east by Fettercairn, on the north and north-west by Edzell; on the west by Menmuir; on the east by Marykirk; on the south by Brechin; on the south-east by Dun and Logie Pert, and contains the small village of INCHBARE, situated two miles from Edzell. Corn and black cattle are the principal products. The churchyard, which is about four miles north from Brechin (its post town), is said to have been the scene of the surrender of the crown of Scotland by John Baliol to Edward I., in 1296. In the same cemetery are three tombstones, said by tradition to mark the graves of three Danish generals. In the north-western part of the parish rises the conspicuous hill of Lundie. There is a parish church and a school. Acreage of the parish, 5,289; population in 1881, 487.

FORFAR,

WITH THE PARISHES OF INVERARITY, KINNETTLES AND RESCOBIE.

FORFAR is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the county town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 57 miles N. from Edinburgh, 15 W. from Arbroath, 14 N. from Dundee, 13 S.W. from Brechin, and 5 E. by N. from Glamis: situate in the lowest part of a country sloping towards it on all sides; and on the Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway, on which line there is a station adjacent to the town. The branch line from Forfar to Dundee is also in the vicinity of the town. Forfar is now of pleasant appearance, though strict regularity has by no means been observed in the formation of the streets, which contain many well-built houses and handsome shops. A large number of beautiful suburban villas have been built to the south and west of the town. Some years since were erected in Castle street, at the general expense of the shire, a handsome suite of County buildings. The Town House, which was re-built previously, besides the requisite offices, contains a spacious upper room for public meetings and amusements. The inhabitants support an excellently-conducted newsroom and library, the latter comprising upwards of three thousand volumes. The original charters which constitute Forfar a royal burgh are lost, but the privileges were confirmed in 1669, in virtue of which the burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, and eleven councillors, a third of whom are elected annually. A sheriff's court is held for the trial of civil and criminal cases generally; and a police court for the determination of local, civil, and police affairs—the latter department confided to constables. The burgh unites with Montrose, Brechin, Inverbervie and Arbroath in sending one member to Parliament; the present representative is John S. Will, Esq., Q.C. The revenue of the burgh, arising from lands, customs, &c., may be averaged at about £2,000 per annum. The chief trade of the town and of its vicinity is the weaving of osnaburgs and other coarse linens. There are now power-loom factories and bleachworks in full operation, employing about 3,000 hands. There are several respectable hotels, the principal being the County and Commercial, the Royal, Castle street, and the Star, opposite the Railway station. There are six banking establishments, viz., branches respectively of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Co. Bank, and the Bank of Scotland. There are likewise a branch of the National Security Savings Bank and a Penny Savings Bank in the town. Few towns have improved more of late than Forfar. Many excellent dwelling-houses and shops have been erected within the last few years, and many of the streets greatly improved. The new County Buildings, near the railway station, and a public hall, the free gift of Mr. Peter Reid, in the same neighbourhood, add much to the appearance of the north side of the town. At KINGSMUIR, in this parish, is a station on the Dundee and Forfar direct line of the Caledonian Railway Company.

The places of worship are two churches under the Establishment, two Free, an Episcopal, an Independent, a United Presbyterian, a Baptist, and a Roman Catholic chapel. In the steeple of the parish church is a very fine bell, presented to the town in the seventeenth century by a native named Strang, who is said to have been brought up from the parish funds; but having gone to Stockholm, amassed a large fortune, and took this manner of showing his gratitude, besides bequeathing a large sum of money for behoof of the poor of the town. There are also a Poorhouse and an Infirmary for the accommodation of the town and the neighbouring parish; the former contains eighty-five beds and the latter forty. There are several public and private schools of repute for pupils of either sex. The Forfar Academy, an excellent institution, commenced its instructive course in 1815, and comprises the usual routine of a liberal education, and includes, among other accomplishments, perfection in the classics, mathematics, the languages, music, &c. Two burgh schools, for the benefit of the poorer classes, have been built at the different ends of the town; they are very commodious, and ably conducted by their respective masters. In 1850 a public cemetery was formed; it occupies nine Scotch acres on the south side of the town, and is laid out in tasteful walks, with ornamental shrubs, &c., forming a pleasant promenade. On a mound at the top of the cemetery, which occupies one of those gently sloping hills for which this part of the country is so noted, a fine monument was erected in 1852, by public subscription, to the memory of Sir Robert Peel. The figure stands upon the centre of a large pedestal, covered by a dome, which is supported on eight pillars. From its site the town and surrounding district may be seen to great advantage, while the monument is observable on its elevated position at a considerable distance. In 1881 a first-class supply of gravitation water was introduced into the town from the Den of Ogil. On the west side of the town is a fine loch, nearly a mile in length by half a mile in breadth; it is a beautiful sheet of water, abounding with pike, perch, and trout. Upon a small artificial island, near the north end of the loch, anciently stood a nunnery, founded by Queen Margaret, as a separate establishment from her husband Malcolm. At the partial drainage of the lake, many years since, for the purpose of obtaining its fertilising marl, some weapons and instruments were found at the bottom; these were conjectured to have been the implements used by the murderers of Malcolm II. at Glamis, on the ground of a tradition which asserts that the assassins, in attempting to cross the lake on the ice, went down and perished. The date of the erection of Forfar Castle, which stood upon an eminence to the north of the town, cannot be certified, but it is said to have been the place of meeting of the first Parliament, convened by King Malcolm Canmore, and his occasional seat of residence after the recovery of his throne from Macbeth. The magistrates of the burgh some years since removed the market cross from the street to the site of the old castle, to mark the spot where that monarch sojourned, as but few remains of the edifice are now extant. The Rev. John Bruce, the intelligent author of the "Statistical Account of the Parish of Forfar," furnishes a number of particulars illustrative of the rise of the town, its tastes and appearances. He says that about the middle of the last century there were not above seven tea-kettles, seven pairs of bellows, and as many watches in Forfar; "now" (1793) he adds, "every house in town has a tea-kettle and bellows, and every menial servant must have his watch." At the same not distant period, an ox, valued at forty shillings, supplied the flesh market of Forfar for a fortnight. The steady advancement of population, trade, and agricultural improvements, both before and since 1793, when this gentleman wrote, have, in this district, as elsewhere, revolutionised the prices and consumption of articles, and now Forfar is one of the most thriving and comfortable towns in the county. The market is held on Saturday, for butter and grain, and cattle markets are held every Monday, at the Auction Mart adjoining the railway station. A fair is held on North Moor for horses and cattle on the second Wednesday in each month from April to November. The parish of Forfar, which embraces an area of 8,353 acres, in 1871 had a population of 12,585, at the same period the Parliamentary rural burgh contained 10,991. In 1881 the numbers were:—For the parish, 14,470; for the burgh, 13,579.

INVERARITY is a parish about three miles square, bounded on the north by the parish of Forfar, its post town, 4 miles S.E. therefrom; on the south by Monikie and Murroes; on the east by Guthrie and Dunnichen, and on the west by Kinnettles, Tealing, and Glamis. Freestone and grey slate abound in the parish; the soil is various. The parish church is conveniently situated. There is also a public school. The turnpike from Forfar to Dundee passes through the parish, which embraces an area of 9,583 acres, and in 1871 had a population of 883, and in 1881, 862.

KINNETTLES, a parish said to have derived its name from the Gaelic word signifying the "head of a bog," is about two miles in length, with an equal breadth, 3 miles from Forfar, its post town, and 2 E. from Glamis. Although the parish cannot boast of any river, yet it is beautifully diversified, having a large rivulet called the Kirbet, which at KIRKTON is crossed by a chain bridge, and a stone bridge of three arches at DOUGLASTOWN (these places are small villages in the parish). This stream, after a circuitous course of seventy-two miles, and ten miles southward of its source, finally joins the Tay. The land is fertile, and beneath the surface an abundance of sandstone, whinstone, and slate abounds. The parish church was built in 1812. There is now a good parish school built at Douglastown, to replace the old one at Kinnettles. Acreage, 2,860. Population of parish in 1871, 378, and in 1881, 386.

RESCOBIE is a parish about 3 miles N.E. from Forfar, its post town, and is about six miles in length and from one to two and a half in breadth, situated between the hills of Dunnichen and Turin. It is bounded by Forfar on the west, Aberlemno, Guthrie, and Kirkden on the east, Kirkton, Dunnichen, and Forfar on the south, and Aberlemno on the north. The soil is various, and mostly in cultivation, with some thriving plantations, and very little waste ground. It has no river or considerable stream, but it is sufficiently watered for domestic and agricultural purposes, and is intersected by the loch of Rescobie, which is more than a mile in length. From the loch of Balgavies, in the parish of Aberlemno, on the north and east of Rescobie, issues the chief branch of the Lunan waters, which gives name to a bay in the German Ocean, into which it falls about twelve miles from Rescobie. These lakes abound with marl, a manure which is very good if skilfully used; stone quarries of various qualities are wrought in this and adjoining parishes, great quantities being conveyed to distant parts by rail from Auldbar Road station, which is situated on the borders of Aberlemno, and the centre of a district famous for its excellent quality of stone. There are a parish church and school, the latter containing a very good and extensive library for the use of the inhabitants. Acreage, 6,559; population of parish in 1871, 748, and in 1881, 685.

FRIOCKHEIM,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CARMYLLIE, GUTHRIE, KINNELL, AND KIRKDEN.

FRIOCKHEIM is a modern village, in the parish of Kirkden, six miles from Arbroath, its post town, situate on the north bank of the Lunan, and near the line of the Dundee, Arbroath, and Forfar section of the Caledonian Railway. It owes its origin to Mr. Anderson, who laid out the ground on a regular plan, and feued it into small lots. The chief trade consists in flax and jute spinning, and there are several pavement quarries in the neighbourhood. Altogether the situation of this place is peculiarly eligible for the seat of manufactures, being nearly equidistant from most of the towns in the county, and in the immediate vicinity of a railway. In 1885 upwards of £700 was collected by public subscription, and the proceeds applied to the erection of a handsome chapel, in connection with the Established Church. It also contains a Free Church, and an Independent chapel. There is no municipal government, the hitherto exemplary conduct and contented habits of the inhabitants rendering such description of superintendence unnecessary. Population in 1881, 1,098.

GUTHRIE parish is divided into two parts, lying nearly six miles asunder, the nearest portion being about a mile and a half from Friockheim. It is a junction on the Dundee, Arbroath, and Forfar section of the Caledonian Railway, and about six miles north-west from Arbroath, its post town. The land slopes from the hill of Guthrie to the south and south-east, a part only being arable. Prior to the Reformation this parish had a collegiate church, with provost and three prebendaries. The patronage of the parish belongs to the family of Guthrie, one of whom was slain at the battle of Flodden. The entire parish contains 3,823 acres, and in 1881 possessed a population of 439.

KINNELL parish, one mile from Friockheim, lies on the north side of the Lunan. The church stands on the bank of the river, at the distance of six miles north-west from Arbroath, its post town, and about four miles west from Inverkeilor. The parish extends about four miles in length by three in breadth, embraces an area of 6,577 statute acres, and is separated from the sea by Lunan parish. It is bounded on the north by the parishes of Farnell and Marytou, on the east by those of Craig, Lunan and Inverkeilor, on the south by the latter, and on the west by those of Kirkden, Guthrie, and Aberlemno. The surface of this district is mostly flat, and in a good state of cultivation; and there are some plantations in a thriving condition. Within the parish are several tumuli; and tradition points out the spot where a battle was fought between the rival clans of Lindsay and Ogilvie, in the year 1443. Population in 1881, 696.

KIRKDEN is a parish between six and seven miles long and two broad, comprising an area of 4,999 statute acres, bounded on the north by Rescobie and Guthrie, on the south by Carmyllie, on the east by Kinnel and Inverkeilor, and by Dunnichen on the west, and is watered by the Lunan and the Vinny, one of its tributaries. A small patch of Dunnichen parish lies in the western division of Kirkden, which latter is tolerably fertile, and the lands well enclosed and planted. In this district are some remains of antiquity, including an obelisk, bearing some rude characters, the meaning of which cannot now be deciphered. The village of Friockheim is in this parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,682.

CARMYLLIE is a parish six miles in length by three in breadth, and bounded by parts of eight parishes, viz: Panbride, Monikie, Guthrie, Dunnichen, Kirkden, Inverkeilor, St. Vigeans, and Arbirlot. The village of Carmyllie is about five miles S. from Friockheim. The parish is hilly, and contains much land that is unproductive; but there are considerable quarries, from which good pavement stones are obtained, and exported in great quantities. The small river Elliott runs through the whole length of the parish, which contains an area of 7,553 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,137.

GLAMIS,

WITH THE JOINT PARISH OF EASSIE AND NEVAY.

GLAMIS (formerly Glammis) is a rich and fertile parish five miles in length by one mile in breadth, bounded on the south by Tealing, Auchterhouse and Newtyle, on the west by Eassie and Nevay, on the north by Airlie and Kirriemuir, and on the east by Forfar and Kinnettles. The village a small one, is twelve miles north from Dundee, twelve north-east from Coupar-Angus, five west from Forfar, and the same distance south from Kirriemuir; situated in the vale of Strathmore, which is watered by the river Dean, and is one of the best enclosed, drained, and farmed districts in Scotland. The principal object of interest in this district is Glamis Castle, which stands in a park near the village. This is an edifice of princely and antique appearance, consisting of an irregular congregation of tall towers, some of which are of remoter date than others. It was anciently a royal residence, and the scene of the death of Malcolm II., in 1034; it afterwards became the property of Macbeth, after whose death it fell to the crown. Robert II. gave it to John Lyon, his favourite, who on marrying the king's second daughter, became the founder of the present noble family of Strathmore; and the eldest son of the earl bears the title of Lord Glamis. On the conviction and execution of the young and beautiful Lady Glamis for witchcraft, in 1537, the castle once more became royal property, and was a residence of James V., but was afterwards restored to the family. It contains a valuable collection of pictures. Near the castle stands a remarkable curiosity, namely, a great number of dials, thus disposed—on a pedestal stand the figures of four lions rampant, life size, each holding a dial in their four paws, facing the cardinal points. From their heads rise a huge mass of stone, something like a pine-apple in shape, with the protuberances upon it formed into dials, making the number of these ancient timepieces eighty-four. The castle, with its historical associations; the pedestal, and Malcolm's gravestone—a huge stone of rude design, standing in the garden of the manse—form the chief attraction to tourists in the county of Forfar. There is a society of Freemasons established here, who hold their meetings in a neat building erected for the purpose, and which is also used for lectures and other purposes. CHARLESTON is a small village in the parish. Charleston and Glen Ogilvie abound with very valuable stone. The station at Glamis is situated about a mile and a half from the village, and is on the Perth and Aberdeen section of the Caledonian Railway. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in April, first Wednesday in May, first Wednesday after the 25th of May, first Saturday after the 28th of October, and first Wednesday after the 22nd of November. Acreage, 14, 347. In 1881 the parish had a population of 1,631.

EASSIE and NEVAY is a joint parish three miles west from Glamis, seven from Forfar, and seven south-west from Kirriemuir, about four in length and three in breadth, bounded on the east and south by Glamis, the small river Dean forming the northern boundary The land to some extent is quite flat, much of which affords excellent pasturage for sheep and cattle. The Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway passes through the parish, joining the Dundee and Coupar-Angus about a mile north of Newtyle. The parish church, a neat building, was erected in 1833. In the old manse stands a portion of an old Roman Catholic church, the graveyard adjoining being very remarkable on account of its gravestones being engraved in old Roman letters. Acreage, 5,053; population of the joint parish in 1881, 561.

POST OFFICE, GLAMIS, John Langlands, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Forfar) at 8 45 and 9 a.m., and from Meigle at 12 0 noon, and are despatched thereto at 7 15 and 11 45 a.m. and 2 30 and 5 30 p.m.——Money Order Office and Savings Bank. The nearest Telegraph Office is at GLAMIS STATION.

INVERKEILOR,

WITH THE PARISH AND VILLAGES OF LUNAN, ETHIEHAVEN, LEYSMILL, AND CHAPELTON.

INVERKEILOR parish presents a front of five miles to the sea at Lunan Bay, near which, on an eminence at the mouth of the Lunan river, stands an old venerable ruin, called "Red Castle," said to have been built by William the Lion, and used by him as a hunting seat. The parish is of an oblong form, extending west about nine miles, and four and a half at its greatest breadth. The church stands inland, on the Lunan water, at the distance of five and three-quarter miles from Arbroath, its post town, and seven from Montrose. The Keilor rivulet runs through the parish to the sea; and the small fishing village of ETHIEHAVEN is situated at the mouth of that river. LEYSMILL and CHAPELTON are also small villages in the parish. There are an Established church and a Free church, the latter erected in the year 1843. It likewise contains two schools, in which are taught the ordinary branches of education. In this locality are several fine seats, particularly Ethie House, the seat of the Earl of Northesk; about a mile from which, eastward, near the sea, stand the remains of St. Murdoch's chapel, at one time a cell of Aberbrothock; and a short way to the south is the promontory of Redhead. The ridge of the coast at this point is very rocky and precipitous, about 200 feet above sea level, and continues gradually rising in a southerly direction for four miles to Dickmountlaw Hill in the adjoining parish of St. Vigeans. This parish, which comprises 516 acres, in 1881 had a population of 1,671.

LUNAN is a small parish situated about seven miles from Arbroath, its post town, and four from Montrose, two miles in length by two in breadth, embracing 1,910 acres, with a population in 1881 of 243. It is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, on the south by the Lunan water, which divides the parish from Inverkeilor, on the west by Kinnell, and on the north by Maryton and Craig. The bay is one of the finest and most romantic in Scotland, forming a segment of about five miles, at each extremity of which there is about a mile of bold, rugged, and perpendicular rocks, rising occasionally in pyramid-shaped columns of 100 or 150 feet high. The church is situated at the south-east extremity of the parish.

POST OFFICE, INVERKEILOR, Mary Thomson, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Arbroath) at 9 a.m., and are despatched at 2 8 p.m.——Money Order and Telegraph Office and Savings Bank.

KIRRIEMUIR,

WITH THE PARISHES OF AIRLIE, CORTACHY AND CLOVA, KINGOLDRUM, AND LINTRATHEN.

KIRRIEMUIR is a town of considerable antiquity, a burgh of barony, and capital of its parish, 62 miles N. from Edinburgh, 18 N. from Dundee, 6 N.W. from Forfar, and 5 N. from Glamis. The parish is divided into two considerable districts, which are separated by part of the parish of Kingoldrum, the Northern part of which, usually called GLENPROSEN, is chiefly pastoral; the southern being chiefly agricultural and manufacturing. The town is situated near the foot of the braes of Angus, on the south-west side of the hill, along the northern brow of a beautiful glen, through which flows the small rivulet Gairie. The prospect from the lower part of the town is bounded by the southern braes of the glen, but from the higher part almost the whole of the delightful vale of Strathmore is brought into view, displaying one of the grandest panoramic scenes it is possible to conceive. The town, the appearance of which has much improved of late years, consists of several streets diverging from each other—fancifully described as resembling the shaft and arms of an anchor. A branch line of railway from the North-Eastern section of the Caledonian railway unites it with other cities and towns, a neat and commodious station being erected at the west end of the town. For a long period Kirriemuir has been the thriving seat of considerable manufactures, comprising about twenty varieties of linen; it is celebrated for the excellent fabric of its cloth, and the ingenuity and industry of those employed in producing it. Some idea may be formed of the importance of this trade from the fact that the looms of Kirriemuir have furnished, in one year, upwards of one hundred thousand pieces, varying from one hundred to one hundred and seventy yards, giving employment to more than two thousand weavers. The date of the barony of Kirriemuir is at the present day unknown, and it is only certain that the jurisdiction of its bailie once extended over a large tract of country. Lord Douglas is superior of the burgh. There is a superintendent of police, and a sheriff's court is held six times a year for the recovery of small debts. The places of worship, which, with their ministers, are given on a subsequent page, comprise edifices for the Established Church, Free Church, United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, and Episcopalians. There are four banking establishments, branches respectively of the British Linen Company, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland. There are also several respectable hotels, including a temperance hotel. The inhabitants of this thriving little town are not more notable for the ingenious and persevering industry, than for their general intelligence and benevolence. Libraries are also connected with the several religious denominations. Besides the public school there is a seminary, erected and endowed from a bequest made in 1829, by Mr. John Webster, writer and banker, and managed by the parochial minister and his kirk session, with which there is a handsome bursary connected, educating about forty or fifty boys free. A little to the east of the town is the cemetery, situated on the sloping side of an eminence, the grounds being beautifully laid out and terraced, and command a most extensive view of the valley of Strathmore, the Sidlaw Hills, and the Grampians in the distance; all uniting to form one of the most picturesque landscapes within the compass of Scottish scenery. Three miles to the north-east, within the boundary of the parish, over the small river Carity, stands the Castle of Inverquharty, a large Gothic edifice, in a state of good preservation, and two miles west are the ruins of Castle Balfour, erected by Cardinal Beaton. The surface of the parish, which extends some twenty miles by six, and embraces an area of 35,600 statute acres, is much diversified. To the east and west of the town it is almost level, but the greater proportion of the district is beautifully varied with hills and dales, rivers, woods and arable fields—some parts embellished with thriving plantations, and it is intersected by roads in all directions. The weekly market is held on Friday, and there is a monthly cattle market; and the fairs on the second Wednesday after the 26th May, the 24th of July or the Wednesday after; the 19th October or the Wednesday after; the second Wednesday after the 22nd November, and on the first Friday after the 26th of May and the 22nd November. The population of the entire parish was in 1881, 6,616.

AIRLIE, (formerly Airly) is a parish about 6 miles west from Kirriemuir, its post town, situated in the western part of the county, on the borders of Perthshire; its length is about six miles, with a breadth varying from a half to four miles, bounded on the north by Lintrathen and Kingoldrum, on the east by Kirriemuir and Glamis, on the south by Eassie and Meigle, and on the west by Alyth and Ruthven; part of the line of boundary is formed by the river Isla and its tributaries, the Meigle and Dean. Within the parish is situated Airlie Castle, the ancient seat of the Ogilvies, Earls of Airlie, and now much frequented in the summer months by visitors. Small portions only of the ancient structure are preserved, these being the front wall and turret with the arched portcullis, which are now connected with the modern mansion of Airlie. Acreage of parish, 8,923. Population in 1881, 844.

CORTACHY AND CLOVA is a joint parish about 6 miles from Kirriemuir, the post town. It is about 19 miles long and from 1 to 6 in breadth, bounded on the north by the parishes of Lochee and Crathie, on the east by Tannadice and Lethnot, on the west by Crathie, and on the south by Kirriemuir, and embraces an area of 42,323 acres. Within the parish of Cortachy is Cortachy Castle, the summer residence of the Earl of Airlie, which in 1883 was partially destroyed by fire. Population in 1881, 442.

KINGOLDRUM is a parish and small village, about four miles distant from Kirriemuir, its post town. The length of the parish is about 6½ miles, and its average breadth is nearly 3 miles. It is bounded by the parishes of Kirriemuir and Cortachy on the north and east, by Airlie on the south, and by Lintrathen on the west. Catlaw, the highest hill in the parish, rises to the height of 2,264 feet above the level of the sea; from its summit one of the most extensive views in Scotland may be obtained. Acreage, 9,619. Population in 1881, 389.

LINTRATHEN is a parish about 12 miles in length and 5 in breadth; it contains the hamlets of BRIDGEND and PITMUDIE. It is bounded on the south by Airlie, on the west by Glenisla, on the north by the Grampians, and on the east by Kingoldrum. The district in which the parish is situated is termed the Braes of Angus, lying between the Grampian range and the valley of Strathmore. The loch from which the town of Dundee is supplied, adjoins the village of Lintrathen at Bridgend. The streams which intersect the parish are the Melgam and the Isla, the latter dividing the parish on the west side from Glenisla, and on which there are two beautiful waterfalls, the Reeky Linn and the Slug of Achrannie, from the former of which arose the name of Lintrathen. Acreage, 22,624. Population in 1881, 641.

LETHAM,

WITH THE PARISH OF DUNNICHEN.

LETHAM is a village situated in the north-eastern portion of the parish of Dunnichen, 5 miles E. from Forfar, its post town, and a mile and a half from AULD BAR ROAD STATION, on the Scottish North-Eastern Section of the Caledonian Railway. It is a modern little place, having been erected on the estate of Mr. Dempster. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agricultural pursuits. Fairs are held on the 26th May, unless that day should fall on a Saturday, when it is held on Monday, and November 23rd. Population in 1881, 885.

DUNNICHEN, supposed to be a corruption of Dun Achen, "the hill or foot of the valley," is a parish which extends 4 miles in length, by about 6 in breadth, bounded on the N.W. by Forfar, on the S.W. by Inverarity, on the N. by Rescobie, on the E. by Kirkden, and on the W. by Forfar. The greatest elevations are the hills of Dunnichen, 800 feet, and the hill of Dumbarrow, 700 feet above the level of the sea. The medium elevation of the parish may be considered about 360 feet above the sea level, and consists of undulations or ridges, running from west to east, the greatest descent being towards Vinney Water (the only stream which runs through the parish), on the south. Sandstone and freestone abound in the parish. The land, which is nearly all arable, is tolerably fertile, having been much improved by the use of marl, artificial manures, and drainage. Acreage, 4,917. In 1881 the population of the parish was 1,422.

POST OFFICE, LETHAM, John D. Stewart, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Forfar) at 12 45 noon, and are despatched thereto at 6 a.m.

POST OFFICE, CRAICHIE, Mrs. Lakie, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Forfar) at 11 45 a.m., and are despatched thereto at 6 a.m.,——The nearest Money Order Office is at FORFAR, five miles distant.

LOCHEE,

WITH THE PARISH OF LIFF AND BENVIE, AND THE VILLAGES OF BIRKHILL, MUIRHEAD AND INVERGOWRIE (OR MYLNEFIELD).

LOCHEE is an important and highly prosperous suburb, and forms part of the royal burgh of Dundee, its post town, in the united parish of Liff and Benvie, situated one mile and a half N.W. from Dundee. It occupies a large space, being incontinuous and dispersed, and presents the appearance of being a busy seat of manufactures. It contains several mills and factories for the spinning and manufacturing of flax, jute, &c., goods, the principal of these being the Camperdown Jute Works, belonging to Messrs. Cox Brothers. These extensive works, which are the largest of this kind in the world, cover a space of about twenty-five acres, and gives employment to about 5,000 persons in the various processes of jute spinning, dyeing, bleaching, calendering, power and hand-loom weaving in all the various fabrics, including hemp and jute carpeting and matting, jute carpet printing, and jute twine and rope spinning. These works have a tower with a splendid peal of fine-toned bells, and an excellent clock with four dials, which are illuminated at night. There is also a chimney shaft of about 300 feet in height, which receives the whole smoke from the works, and for ornamental architecture and usefulness is not surpassed. The Dundee and Newtyle branch of the Caledonian Railway passes through the village, and is connected by a branch which runs into these works for the conveyance of all goods to and from them. In addition to the above the Messrs. Cox Brothers have also large works giving employment to a good number of Europeans and natives in India, situated on the river Hooghley, at Calcutta, where the jute is selected and then packed by hydraulic presses, previous to being shipped to their works here. There are two stations conveniently situated for the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, one in the village and the other at CAMPERDOWN, about a mile north. In the immediate neighbourhood are several quarries of excellent freestone, which have been wrought for a long period. The stone from these quarries was used in the construction of the Houses of Parliament, the Dundee harbour, and is sent to foreign countries. The greater part of the inhabitants are employed at the works above alluded to.

There are two Established churches, St. Luke's being the gift of Thomas H. Cox, Esq., a Free church, and a chapel each for the Episcopalians, Baptists, Roman Catholics and United Presbyterians. The latter congregation finding their place of worship too small, have erected a handsome edifice at cost of upwards of £6,000. It is in the middle pointed Gothic style, and measures seventy-one feet by fifty-eight feet inside, and thirty-three feet high. It has a gallery extending round three sides, and altogether it is seated for 1,000 persons; behind the church are class room, vestry hall, waiting room, &c. Externally the church has a fine appearance, having a large five-light window in south front, over the central doorway; while at the south-west angle is a tower and spire rising to a height of one hundred and thirty feet above the ground. The tower contains a fine peal of eight bells, by Messrs. Mears & Stainbanks, of London. They were the first erected in any church in the burgh of Dundee, and were presented by Messrs. Cox Brothers, at a cost of from £400 to £500. James Macaren, Esq., architect, Dundee, furnished the designs. There are also three public schools and a half-time Free school, the latter having been built in 1884 by Messrs. Cox Brothers, at a cost of about £2,000. Two manses have been erected for the ministers of the United Presbyterian and Established churches. There are branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and also a Savings Bank. In 1881, Lochee contained a population of 15,000.

LIFF AND BENVIE is a united parish, the latter incorporated with the former in 1758. The district, which lies immediately west of Dundee, with a portion touching the Tay, is generally well cultivated, and beneath the surface freestone, belonging to the old red sandstone formation, is found and extensively quarried in various parts of the parish. There are within the parish the villages of LIFF, BIRKHILL, MUIRHEAD and LOCHEE and part of INVERGOWRIE. The new Royal Lunatic Asylum, West Green, is situated near the western boundary of the parish. The Caledonian Railway runs through the parish, and has stations at Liff, Camperdown and Lochee. The greater part of the population of this parish is included in the west of Dundee.

BIRKHILL and MUIRHEAD are small villages in the united parish of Liff and Benvie, situated on the Coupar-Angus road, and distant respectively 2 and 3 miles from Lochee, and 4 and 5 from Dundee, their post town. At Muirhead is a Free church and a Board school. Population returned with the parish.

INVERGOWRIE (or Mylnefield) is a village singularly situated, being partly in Perthshire and partly in Forfarshire, one portion being in the parish of Longforgan, the other in that of Liff. It is 4 miles W. from Dundee. There are a Free church, an Episcopal church and a Mission church in connection with the Established Church, also a Board school. A fragment of an ancient church, said to be the oldest in Scotland, forms an interesting object. A graveyard surrounds it, in which are deposited the remains of several highly respectable persons; among others the Very Rev. Heneage Horsley, M.A., Dean of Brechin and Prebendary of Saint Asaph, son of the renowned Dr. Horsley, Bishop of Saint Asaph. He died in 1847. At BULLIONFIELD, contiguous to the above, in the parish of Liff, is the paper mill of Mr. David M. Watson. The Dundee and Perth Railway has a station near the village. The population is chiefly included in the parish of Longforgan.
